MACBETH.

My voice is in my sword ; thou bloodier villain
Than terms can give thee out !

MACBETH

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

DR. JOHNSON thought it necessary to prefix to this play an apology for Shakespeare's magic;—in which he says, "A poet, who should now make the whole action of his tragedy depend upon enchantment, and produce the chief events by the assistance of supernatural agents, would be censured as transgressing the bounds of probability, be banished from the theatre to the nursery, and condemned to write fairy tales instead of tragedies." He then proceeds to defend this transgression upon the ground of the credulity of the poet's age; when "the scenes of enchantment, however they may be now ridiculed, were both by himself and his audience thought awful and affecting." By whom, or when (always excepting French criticism), these sublime conceptions were in danger of ridicule, he has not told us; and I sadly fear that this superfluous apology arose from the misgivings of the great critic's mind. Schlegel has justly remarked that, "Whether the age of Shakespeare still believed in witchcraft and ghosts, is a matter of perfect indifference for the justification of the use which, in Hamlet and Macbeth, he has made of pre-existing traditions. No superstition can ever be prevalent and widely diffused through ages and nations without having a foundation in human nature: on this foundation the poet builds; he calls up from their hidden abysses that dread of the unknown, that presage of a dark side of nature, and a world of spirits which philosophy now imagines it has altogether exploded. In this manner he is in some degree both the por-trayer and the philosopher of a superstition; that is, not the philosopher who denies and turns into ridicule, but, which is still more difficult, who distinctly exhibits its origin to us in apparently irrational and yet natural opinions."—In another place the same admirable critic says—"Since The Furies of Æschylus, nothing so grand and terrible has ever been composed: The Witches, it is true, are not divine Eumenides, and are not intended to be so: they are ignoble and vulgar instruments of hell. They discourse with one another like women of the very lowest class; for this was the class to which witches were supposed to belong. When, however, they address Macbeth their tone assumes more elevation: their predictions have all the obscure brevity, the majestic solemnity, by which oracles have in all times contrived to inspire mortals with reverential awe. We here see that the witches are merely instruments; they are governed by an invisible spirit, or the operation of such great and dreadful events would be above their sphere." Their agency was necessary; for natural motives alone would have seemed inadequate to effect such a change as takes place in the nature and dispositions of Macbeth. By this means the poet "has exhibited a more sublime picture to us: an ambitious but noble hero, who yields to a deep-laid hellish temptation; and all the crimes to which he is impelled by necessity, to secure the fruits of his first crime, cannot altogether eradicate in him the stamp of native heroism." He has therefore given a threefold division to the guilt of that crime. The first idea comes from that being whose whole activity is guided by a lust of wickedness. The weird sisters surprise Macbeth in the moment of intoxication after his victory, when his love of glory has been gratified; they cheat his eyes by exhibiting to him as the work of fate what can only in reality be accomplished by his own deed, and gain credence for their words by the immediate fulfilment of the first prediction. The opportunity for murdering the king immediately offers itself; Lady Macbeth conjures him not to let it slip; she urges him on with a fiery eloquence, which has all those sophisms at command that serve to throw a false grandeur over crime. Little more than the mere execution falls to the share of Macbeth; he is driven to it as it were in a state of commotion, in which his mind is bewildered. Repentance immediately follows; nay, even precedes the deed; and the stings of his conscience leave him no rest either night or day. But he is now fairly entangled in the snares of hell; it is truly frightful to behold that Macbeth, who once as a warrior could spurn at death, now that he dreads the prospect of the life to come, clinging with growing anxiety to his earthly existence, the more miserable it becomes, and pitilessly removing out of his way whatever to his dark and suspicious mind seems to threaten danger. However much we may abhor his actions, we cannot altogether refuse to sympathize with the state of his mind; we lament the ruin of so many noble qualities; and, even in his last defence, we are compelled to admire in him the struggle of a brave will with a cowardly conscience. The poet wishes to show that the conflict of good and evil in this world can only take place by the permission of Providence, which converts the curse that individual mortals draw down on their heads into a blessing to others. Lady Macbeth, who of all the human beings is the most guilty participator in the murder of the king, falls, through the horrors of her conscience, into a state of incurable bodily and mental disease; she dies, unlamented by her husband, with all the symptoms of reprobation. Macbeth is still found worthy of dying the death of a hero on the field of battle. Banquo atones for the ambitious curiosity which prompted him to wish to know his glorious descendants by an early death, as he thereby rouses Macbeth's jealousy; but he preserved his mind pure from the bubbles of the witches: his name is blessed in his race, destined to enjoy for a long succession of ages that royal dignity which Macbeth could only hold during his own life. In the progress of the action, this piece is altogether the reverse of Hamlet: it strides forward with amazing rapidity from the first catastrophe (for Duncan's murder may be called a catastrophe) to the last. Thought, and done! is the general motto; for, as Macbeth says:—

'The flighty purpose never is o'ertook
Unless the deed go with it.'

"In every feature we see a vigorous heroic age in the hardy North, which steels every nerve. The precise duration of the action cannot be ascertained,—years, perhaps, according to the story; but we know that to the imagination the most crowded time appears always the shortest. Here we can hardly conceive how so very much can be compressed into so narrow a space; not merely external events—the very innermost recesses of the minds of the persons of the drama are laid open to us. It is as if the drags were taken from the wheels of time, and they rolled along without interruption in their descent. Nothing can equal the power of this picture in the excitation of horror. We need only allude to the circumstance attending the murder of Duncan, the dagger that hovers before the eyes of Macbeth, the vision of Banquo at the feast, the madness of Lady Macbeth; what can we possibly say on the subject that will not rather weaken the impression? Such scenes stand alone, and are to be found only in this poet; otherwise the tragic muse might exchange her mask for the head of Medusa*."

Shakespeare followed the chronicle of Holinshed, and Holinshed borrowed his narration from the Chronicles of Scotland, translated by John Bellenden, from the Latin of Hector Boethius, and first published at Edinburgh in 1541.

"Malcolm the Second, king of Scotland, had two daughters. The eldest was married to Crynin, the father of Duncan, Thane of the isles, and western parts of Scotland; and on the death of Malcolm without male issue Duncan succeeded to the throne. Malcolm's second daughter was married to Sinel, Thane of Glamis, the father of Macbeth. Duncan, who married the sister of Siward,

* Lectures on Dramatic Literature, by A. W. Schlegel, translated by John Black, London, 1815, vol. ii. p. 200.

Earl of Northumberland, was murdered by his cousin-german Macbeth in the castle of Inverness about the year 1040 or 1045. Macbeth was himself slain by Macduff, according to Boethius in 1061, according to Buchanan in 1057, at which time Edward the Confessor reigned in England.

In the reign of Duncan, Banquo having been plundered by the people of Lochaber of some of the king's revenues, which he had collected, and being dangerously wounded in the affray, the persons concerned in this outrage were summoned to appear at a certain day. But they slew the serjeant-at-arms who summoned them, and chose one Macdonwald as their captain. Macdonwald speedily collected a considerable body of forces from Ireland and the Western Isles, and in one action gained a victory over the king's army. In this battle Malcolm, a Scottish nobleman (who was lieutenant to Duncan in Lochaber) was slain. Afterwards Macbeth and Banquo were appointed to the command of the army; and Macdonwald, being obliged to take refuge in a castle in Lochaber, first slew his wife and children, and then himself. Macbeth, on entering the castle, finding his dead body, ordered his head to be cut off and carried to the king, at the castle of Bertha, and his body to be hung on a high tree.

At a subsequent period, in the last year of Duncan's reign, Sueno, king of Norway, landed a powerful army in Fife, for the purpose of invading Scotland. Duncan immediately assembled an army to oppose him, and gave the command of two divisions of it to Macbeth and Banquo, putting himself at the head of a third. Sueno was successful in one battle, but in a second was routed; and, after a great slaughter of his troops, he escaped with ten persons only, and fled back to Norway. Though there was an interval of time between the rebellion of Macdonwald and the invasion of Sueno, Shakespeare has woven these two actions together, and immediately after Sueno's defeat the present play commences.

It is remarkable that Buchanan has pointed out Macbeth's history as a subject for the stage. "Multa hic fabulose quidam nostrorum affingunt; sed quia theatris aut Milesiis fabulis sunt aptiora quam historiae, ea omitto."—Rerum Scot. Hist. Lib. vii.

Milton also enumerates the subject among those he considered well suited for tragedy, but it appears that he would have attempted to preserve the unity of time by placing the relation of the murder of Duncan in the mouth of his ghost.

Macbeth is one of the latest, and unquestionably one of the noblest efforts of Shakespeare's genius. Equally impressive in the closet and on the stage, where to witness its representation has been justly pronounced "the first of all dramatic enjoyments." Malone places the date of its composition in 1606, and it has been supposed to convey a dexterous and delicate compliment to James the First, who derived his lineage from Banquo, and first united the threefold sceptre of England, Scotland, and Ireland. At the same time the monarch's prejudices on the subject of demonology were flattered by the choice of the story.

It was once thought that Shakespeare derived some hints for his scenes of incantation from The Witch, a tragi-comedy, by John Middleton, which, after lying long in manuscript, was published about thirty years since by Isaac Reed; but Malone* has with considerable ingenuity shown that Middleton's drama was most probably written subsequently to Macbeth.

Malone has an elaborate argument to prove that Macbeth was written in 1606, which he supports by the allusions to the cheapness of corn, and to the doctrine of equivocation promulgated by Garnet, who was executed in 1606, occurring in the speech of the Porter in the third Scene of the second Act. What we know for certain is, that the play was performed on the 20th of April, 1610, at the Globe Theatre, when Dr. Forman, the astrologer, witnessed its representation, and gives an abstract of the plot in his Diary. We know not, however, whether it was then new to the stage; and the allusion to the union of the three kingdoms by the accession of King James, in the first Scene of Act iv.—

“Some I see

That two-fold balls and treble sceptres carry,” seems to point to an earlier period. It appears from a passage in Kemp's Nine Daies Wonder, printed in 1600, that a ballad existed upon the subject, but the allusion is somewhat obscure. The play was first printed in the folio of 1623.

MACBETH,

ACT I.

SCENE I. An open Place.

Thunder and Lightning. Enter three Witches.

1 Witch.

W

HEN shall we three meet again
In thunder, lightning, or in rain?

2 Witch. When the hurlyburly's done¹,

When the battle's lost and won.

3 Witch. That will be ere the set of sun.

¹ When the hurlyburly's done. In Adagia Scotica, or a Collection of Scotch Proverbs and Proverbial Phrases; collected by R. B. very useful and delightful. Lond. 12^o. 1668:—

“Little kens the wife that sits by the fire

How the wind blows cold in hurle burle swyre.”

Peacham, in his Garden of Eloquence, 1577, shows what was the ancient acceptation of the word among us: “Onomatopœia, when we invent, devise, fayne, and make a name imitating the sound of that it signifyeth, as hurlyburly, for an uprore and tumultuous stirre.” So in Baret's Alvearie, 1573:—“But harke yonder: what hurlyburly or noyse is yonde: what sturre ruffling or bruite is that?”—The witches could not mean when the storm was done, but when the tumult of the battle was over; for they are to meet again in lightning, thunder, and rain: their element was a storm. Thus in Arthur Wilson's History of James I. p. 141—“Being in a citie not very defensible, among a wavering people, and a conquering enemy, in the field, took time by the foretop, and in this hurleburlye the next morning left Prague.”

1 Witch. Where the place?

2 Witch. Upon the heath:

3 Witch. There to meet with Macbeth.

1 Witch. I come, Graymalkin!

2 Witch. Paddock calls²:

3 Witch. Anon.

All. Fair is foul, and foul is fair:

Hover through the fog and filthy air³.

SCENE II. A Camp near Fores.

Alarum within. Enter King DUNCAN, MALCOLM, DONALBAIN, LENOX, with Attendants, meeting a bleeding Soldier¹.

Dun. What bloody man is that? He can report.
As seemeth by his plight, of the revolt
The newest state.

² Upton observes that, to understand this passage, we should suppose one familiar calling with the voice of a cat, and another with the croaking of a toad. A paddock most generally signified a toad, though it sometimes means a frog. What we now call a toadstool was anciently called a paddock-stool.

³ I follow Mr. Hunter's regulation of this passage though unauthorised by the old arrangement, because, with him, I think it clearly indicated by the subsequent three times three of the witches:—

“Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice again to make up nine.”

Coleridge observes that “The Weird Sisters are as true a creation of Shakespeare's as his Ariel and Caliban,—fates, fairies, and materializing witches being the elements. They are wholly different from any representation of witches in the contemporary writers, and yet presented a sufficient external resemblance to the creatures of vulgar prejudice to act immediately on the audience. Their character consists in the imaginative disconnected from the good; they are the shadowy obscure and fearfully anomalous of physical nature,—elemental avengers without sex or kin.”

Mal. This is the sergeant²,
Who, like a good and hardy soldier, fought
'Gainst my captivity:—Hail, brave friend!
Say to the king the knowledge of the broil,
As thou didst leave it.

Sold. Doubtful it stood;
As two spent swimmers, that do cling together,
And choke their art. The merciless Macdonwald (Worthy to be a rebel; for to that³
The multiplying villainies of nature
Do swarm upon him), from the western isles
Of Kernes and Gallowglasses is supplied⁴;
And fortune, on his damned quarry⁵ smiling,
Show'd like a rebel's whore⁶; but all's too weak⁷;
For brave Macbeth (well he deserves that name),

² Sergeants, in ancient times, were not the petty officers now distinguished by that title; but men performing one kind of feudal military service, in rank next to esquires.

³ Vide Tyrwhitt's Glossary to Chaucer, v. for; and Pegge's Anecdotes of the English Language, p. 205. For to that means no more than for that; or cause that. The late editions erroneously point this passage, and as erroneously explain it. I follow the punctuation of the first folio.

⁵ But fortune on his damned quarry smiling. Quarry is a term borrowed from the chase, and signified the game pursued; from Coriolanus, Act i. Sc. 1, we gather it signified also a heap of what was killed in the chase:—

“I'd make a quarry
With thousands of these quartered slaves, as high
As I could pitch my lance.”

Damned is doomed, or condemned; quarrel has been improperly substituted.

⁶ The meaning is that Fortune, while she smiled on him, deceived him.

⁷ Thus the old copy. It has been suggested that we should read all-to-weak, an idiom frequent in our older language, and

Disdaining fortune, with his brandish'd steel,
Which smok'd with bloody execution,
Like valour's minion,
Carv'd out his passage, till he fac'd the slave ;
And ne'er⁸ shook hands, nor bade farewell to him,
Till he unseam'd him from the nave to the chaps
And fix'd his head upon our battlements.

Dun. O valiant cousin ! worthy gentleman !

Sold. As whence the sun 'gins his reflexion
Shipwracking storms and direful thunders break⁹ ;
So from that spring, whence comfort seem'd to come,
Discomfort swells. Mark, king of Scotland, mark :
No sooner justice had, with valour arm'd,
Compell'd these skipping Kernes to trust their heels ;
But the Norway lord, surveying vantage,
With furbish'd arms, and new supplies of men,
Began a fresh assault.

Dun. Dismay'd not this our captains, Macbeth and Banquo ?

Sold. Yes ; as sparrows, eagles ; or the hare, the lion.
If I say sooth, I must report, they were
As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks¹⁰ ;
So they doubly redoubled strokes upon the foe :

which is even used by Milton, who has all-to-ruffled, where all-to is merely augmentative: I doubt whether change is necessary here, as the old reading is perfectly intelligible.

⁸ The old copy reads which nev'r.

⁹ The allusion is to the storms that prevail in spring, at the vernal equinox—the equinoctial gales. The beginning of the reflexion of the sun (Cf. So from that Spring) is the epoch of his passing from the severe to the milder season, opening however with storms. Break is not in the first folio. The second has breaking. Pope substituted break.

¹⁰ Cracks, that is reports. So in the old play of King John, 1591 :—

“ As harmless and without effect,
As is the echo of a cannon's crack.”

The anachronism of mentioning cannon as in use at this early period was disregarded by the poet, who has again mentioned them as in use in the reign of King John.

Except they meant to bathe in reeking wounds,
Or memorize another Golgotha,
I cannot tell:—

But I am faint, my gashes cry for help.

Dun. So well thy words become thee, as thy wounds;
They smack of honour both:—Go, get him surgeons.
[Exit Soldier, attended.]

Enter ROSSE and ANGUS.

Who comes here?

Mal. The worthy thane of Rosse.—

Len. What a haste looks through his eyes!
So should he look, that seems to speak things strange¹¹.

Rosse. God save the king!

Dun. Whence cam'st thou, worthy thane?

Rosse. From Fife, great king;
Where the Norwegian banners flout the sky¹²
And fan our people cold. Norway himself,
With terrible numbers,
Assisted by that most disloyal traitor
The thane of Cawdor, 'gan a dismal conflict:
Till that Bellona's bridegroom¹³ lapp'd in proof,
Confronted him with self-comparisons¹⁴,
Point against point, rebellious arm 'gainst arm,
Curbing his lavish spirit: And, to conclude,
The victory fell on us;—

Dun. Great happiness!

Rosse. That now
Sweno, the Norway's king, craves composition;

¹¹ That seems to speak things strange, i. e. that seems about to speak them.

¹² So in King John:—

“Mocking the air with colours idly spread.”

¹³ By Bellona's bridegroom Shakespeare means Macbeth. Lapp'd in proof is defended by armour of proof.

¹⁴ Confronted him with self-comparisons. By him is meant Norway, and by self-comparisons is meant that he gave him as good as he brought, showed that he was his equal.

Nor would we deign him burial of his men,
Till he disbursed, at Saint Colmes' Inch¹⁵,
Ten thousand dollars to our general use.

Dun. No more that thane of Cawdor shall deceive
Our bosom interest:—Go, pronounce his present death,
And with his former title greet Macbeth.

Rosse. I'll see it done.

Dun. What he hath lost, noble Macbeth hath won.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. A Heath.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches.

1 Witch. Where hast thou been, sister?

2 Witch. Killing swine.

3 Witch. Sister, where thou?

1 Witch. A sailor's wife had chestnuts in her lap,
And mounch'd, and mounch'd, and mounch'd:—

Give me, quoth I:

*Aroint thee*¹, witch! the rump-fed ronyon² cries.

Her husband's to Aleppo gone, master o' the Tiger:

¹ The etymology of this imprecation is yet to seek. Rynt ye for out with ye! stand off! is still used in Cheshire; where there is also a proverbial saying, "Rynt ye, witch, quoth Besse Locket to her mother." Tooke thought it was from roynous, and might signify "a scab or scale on thee!" The French have a phrase of somewhat similar sound and import—" Arry-avant, away there ho!" Mr. Douce thinks that "aroint thee" will be found to have a Saxon origin. The instance of its early use adduced by Mr. Hunter, from Berchyl's Rebellion of Perkin Warbeck, cited in the Monthly Mirror, is a palpable and clumsy forgery, possibly by Tom Hill.

² Rump-fed ronyon, a scabby or mangy woman fed on offals; the rumps being formerly part of the emoluments or kitchen fees of the cooks in great houses.

But in a sieve I'll thither sail³,
 And, like a rat without a tail,
 I'll do, I'll do, and I'll do.

2 Witch. I'll give thee a wind⁴.

1 Witch. Th' art kind.

3 Witch. And I another.

1 Witch. I myself have all the other ;
 And the very ports they blow,
 All the quarters that they know
 I' the shipman's card⁵.

³ In The Discovery of Witchcraft, by Reginald Scott, 1584, he says it was believed that witches "could sail in an egg-shell, a cockle or muscle-shell through and under the tempestuous seas." And in another pamphlet, "Declaring the damnable Life of Doctor Fian, a notable Sorcerer, who was burned at Edenborough in Januarie last, 1591"—"All they together went to sea, each one in a riddle or cive, and went in the same very substantially, with flaggons of wine making merrie, and drinking by the way in the same riddles or cives," &c.

Sir W. D'Avenant, in his Albovine, 1629, says:—

"He sits like a witch sailing in a sieve."

It was the belief of the times that though a witch could assume the form of any animal she pleased, the tail would still be wanting.

⁴ This free gift of a wind is to be considered as an act of sisterly friendship; for witches were supposed to sell them. So in Summer's Last Will and Testament, 1600:—

"In Ireland and in Denmark both
Witches for gold will sell a man a wind,
 Which, in the corner of a napkin wrapp'd,
 Shall blow him safe unto what coast he will."

See Harington's note on the 38th Book of Orlando Furioso, and Giles Fletcher's Russe Commonwealth, 1591, p. 77 b. quoted by Mr. Hunter. The following note in Braithwaite's "Two Lancashire Lovers" shows the universality of the notion:—"The incomparable Barclay in his Mirror of Minde, cap. 8, discovering Norway to be a rude nation, and with most men who have conversed or commerced with them, held infamous for Witchcraft. They, by report, saith he, "can sell Windes, which those that saile from thence doe buy, equalling by a true prodigy the fabulous story of Ulisses and Æolus. And these Penell Pugges [i. e. witches of the Penell Hills] have affirmed the like upon their own confession."

⁵ i. e. the sailor's chart; carte-marine. The words to show are

I'll drain him dry as hay :
 Sleep shall neither night nor day
 Hang upon his pent-house lid ;
 He shall live a man forbid⁶ :
 Weary sev'n-nights, nine times nine,
 Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine⁷ :
 Though his bark cannot be lost,
 Yet it shall be tempest-toss'd⁸.
 Look what I have.

2 Witch. Show me, show me.

1 Witch. Here I have a pilot's thumb, Wrack'd, as homeward he did come. [Drum within

3 Witch. A drum, a drum ;
 Macbeth doth come.

All. The weird sisters⁹, hand in hand, supplied in Mr. Collier's folio, but we are not warranted in supplying rhymes which may not have been intended.

⁶ Forbid, i. e. forspoken, unhappy, charmed or bewitched. The explanation of Theobald and Johnson, "interdicted or under a curse," is erroneous. A forbodin fellow, Scotice, still signifies an unhappy one.

⁷ This was supposed to be put in execution by means of a waxen figure. Holinshed, speaking of the witchcraft practised to destroy King Duff, says that they found one of the witches roasting, upon a wooden broach, an image of wax at the fire, resembling in each feature the king's person, &c.—"for as the image did waste afore the fire, so did the bodie of the king break forth in sweat: and as for the words of the enchantment, they served to keepe him still waking from sleepe." This may serve to explain the foregoing passage:—

 Hang upon his pent-house lid."

⁸ In the pamphlet about Dr. Fian, already quoted—"Again it is confessed, that the said christened cat was the cause of the King's majestie's shippe, at his coming forth of Denmarke, had a contrarie winde to the rest of his shippes then being in his companie."—"And further the said witch declared, that his majestie had never come safely from the sea, if his faith had not prevailed above their intentions." To this circumstance, perhaps, Shakespeare's allusion is sufficiently plain.

⁹ The old copy has weyward, probably to indicate the pronunciation; it is also used by Heywood. Weird, from the Saxon

Posters of the sea and land,
 Thus do go about, about ;
 Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
 And thrice again, to make up nine :
 Peace !—the charm's wound up.

Enter MACBETH and BANQUO.

Macb. So foul and fair a day I have not seen.

Ban. How far is't call'd to Forres?—What are these,
 So wither'd, and so wild in their attire ;
 That look not like the inhabitants o' the earth,
 And yet are on't? Live you? or are you aught
 That man may question? You seem to understand me,
 By each at once her choppy finger laying
 Upon her skinny lips :—You should be women,
 And yet your beards forbid me to interpret
 That you are so.

Macb. Speak, if you can ;—What are you ?

1 Witch. All hail, Macbeth ! hail to thee, thane of Glamis¹⁰!

2 Witch. All hail, Macbeth ! hail to thee, thane
 of Cawdor !

3 Witch. All hail, Macbeth ! that shalt be king hereafter.

Ban. Good sir, why do you start; and seem to fear
 Things that do sound so fair?—I' the name of truth,
 Are ye fantastical¹¹, or that indeed

wyrð, a witch, Shakespeare found in Holinshed. In Troilus and Cressid, Chaucer uses wierdes for destinies, and in the Ortus Vocabulorum we have “Cloto—Anglice, one of the three wyrde sisters.” Gawin Douglas, in his translation of Virgil, renders the parcæ by weird sisters.

¹⁰ The thaneship of Glamis was the ancient inheritance of Macbeth's family. The castle where they lived is still standing, and was lately the magnificent residence of the Earl of Strathmore. Gray has given a particular description of it in a Letter to Dr. Wharton.

¹¹ Are ye fantastical, i. e. creatures of fancy or imagination.

Which outwardly ye show? My noble partner
 You greet with present grace, and great prediction
 Of noble having¹², and of royal hope,
 That he seems rapt¹³ withal; to me you speak not:
 If you can look into the seeds of time,
 And say, which grain will grow, and which will not Speak then to me, who neither beg nor fear
 Your favours, nor your hate.

1 Witch. Hail!

2 Witch. Hail!

3 Witch. Hail!

1 Witch. Lesser than Macbeth, and greater.

2 Witch. Not so happy, yet much happier.

3 Witch. Thou shalt get kings, though thou be none:

So, all hail, Macbeth, and Banquo!

1 Witch. Banquo, and Macbeth, all hail!

Macb. Stay, you imperfect speakers, tell me more:
 By Sinel's¹⁴ death, I know, I am thane of Glamis;
 But how of Cawdor? the thane of Cawdor lives,
 A prosperous gentleman; and to be king
 Stands not within the prospect of belief,
 No more than to be Cawdor. Say, from whence
 You owe this strange intelligence! or why
 Upon this blasted heath you stop our way
 With such prophetick greeting?—Speak, I charge
 you.

[Witches vanish.]

Ban. The earth hath bubbles, as the water has,
 And these are of them.—Whither are they vanish'd?

Macb. Into the air; and what seem'd corporal, melted
 As breath into the wind.—'Would they had staid!

Ban. Were such things here, as we do speak about?

¹² Having, i. e. estate, fortune.

¹³ Rapt is rapturously affected; extra se raptus.

¹⁴ Sinel. Dr. Beattie conjectured that the real name of this family was Sinane, and that Dunsinane, or the hill of Sinana, from thence derived its name.

Or have we eaten on the insane root¹⁵,
That takes the reason prisoner?

Macb. Your children shall be kings.

Ban. You shall be king.

Macb. And thane of Cawdor too; went it not so?

Ban. To the selfsame tune, and words. Who's here?

Enter ROSSE and ANGUS.

Rosse. The king hath happily receiv'd, Macbeth,
The news of thy success: and when he reads
Thy personal venture in the rebel's fight,
His wonders and his praises do contend,
Which should be thine, or his. Silenc'd with that,
In viewing o'er the rest o' the selfsame day,
He finds thee in the stout Norweyan ranks,
Nothing afraid of what thyself didst make,
Strange images of death. As thick as tale¹⁶,
Came post with post; and every one did bear
Thy praises in his kingdom's great defence,
And pour'd them down before him.

¹⁵ The insane root was probably henbane. In Batman's Commentary on Bartholome de Propriet. Rerum, a book with which Shakespeare was familiar, is the following passage:—"Henbane is called insana, mad, for the use thereof is perillous; for if it be eate or dronke it breedeth madnesse, or slow lykenesse of sleepe. Therefore this hearb is called commonly mirilidium, for it taketh away wit and reason."

¹⁶ As thick as tale came post with post, i. e. posts arrived as fast as they could be counted. The old copy reads can. Rowe made the emendation. "Thicke," says Baret, "that cometh often and thicke together; creber, frequens, frequent, souvent-venant." And again: "Crebritas literarum, the often sending, or thicke coming of letters. Thicke breathing, anhelitus creber." Shakespeare twice uses "to speak thick" for "to speak quick." To tale or tell is to score or number. Rowe altered it to "as quick as hail." Mr. Hunter approves that reading, which Mr. Dyce inclines to think may be right, as we have it in Drayton's Battaile of Agincourt;—

"Out of the towne came quarries thick as haile."

But a shower of arrows, and a rapid succession of messengers are very distinct things.

Ang. We are sent,
To give thee, from our royal master, thanks ;
Only to herald thee into his sight, not pay thee.

Rosse. And, for an earnest of a greater honour,
He bade me, from him, call thee Thane of Cawdor
In which addition, hail, most worthy thane !
For it is thine.

Ban. What, can the devil speak true ?

Macb. The thane of Cawdor lives ? Why do you dress me
In borrow'd robes ?

Ang. Who was the thane, lives yet ;
But under heavy judgment bears that life
Which he deserves to lose. Whether he was combin'd
With those of Norway, or did line the rebel
With hidden help and vantage ; or that with both
He labour'd in his country's wrack, I know not ;
But treasons capital, confess'd, and prov'd,
Have overthrown him.

Macb. Glamis, and thane of Cawdor
The greatest is behind.—Thanks for your pains.—
Do you not hope your children shall be kings,
When those that gave the thane of Cawdor to me,
Promis'd no less to them ?

Ban. That, trusted home,
Might yet enkindle¹⁷ you unto the crown,
Besides the thane of Cawdor. But 'tis strange :
And oftentimes, to win us to our harm,
The instruments of darkness tell us truths ;
Win us with honest trifles, to betray us
In deepest consequence.—
Cousins, a word, I pray you.

Macb. (Two truths are told,

¹⁷ Enkindle means encourage you to expect the crown. A similar expression occurs in As You Like It, Act i. Sc. 1 :—

“Nothing remains but that I kindle the boy thither.”

As happy prologues to the swelling act¹⁸
 Of the imperial theme.—I thank you, gentlemen.—
 This supernatural soliciting
 Cannot be ill ; cannot be good :—If ill,
 Why hath it given me earnest of success,
 Commencing in a truth ? I am thane of Cawdor :
 If good, why do I yield to that suggestion¹⁹
 Whose horrid image doth unfix my hair,
 And make my seated heart knock at my ribs,
 Against the use of nature ? Present fears
 Are less than horrible imaginings²⁰ :
 My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,
 Shakes so my single²¹ state of man, that function
 Is smother'd in surmise ; and nothing is,
 But what is not²².

Ban. Look, how our partner's rapt.

Macb. If chance will have me king, why, chance may crown me,

Without my stir.

Ban. New honours come upon him

Like our strange garments ; cleave not to their mould,
 But with the aid of use.

¹⁸ As happy prologues to the swelling act. So in the prologue to King Henry V.— “Princes to act,
 And monarchs to behold the swelling scene.”

¹⁹ Suggestion, i. e. temptation.

²⁰ i. e. the presence of objects of fear.

So in The Tragedie of Cræsus, by Lord Sterline, 1604 :—

“For as the shadow seems more monstrous still
 Than doth the substance whence it hath the being,
 So th' apprehension of approaching ill
Seems greater than itself, whilst fears are lying.”

²¹ By his single state of man, Macbeth means his simple condition of human nature. Single soul, for a simple or weak guileless person, was the phraseology of the poet's time. Simplicity and singleness were synonymous.

²² But what is not. Shakespeare has something like this sentiment in King Richard II.—

“Is nought but shadows
 Of what is not.”

Macb. Come what come may ;
Time and the hour runs through the roughest day.

Ban. Worthy Macbeth, we stay upon your leisure.

Macb. Give me your favour :—

My dull brain was wrought with things forgotten.

Kind gentlemen, your pains are register'd

Where every day I turn the leaf to read them—

Let us toward the king.—

Think upon what hath chanc'd : and, at more time,

The interim having weigh'd it²³, let us speak

Our free hearts each to other.

Ban. Very gladly.

Macb. Till then, enough.—Come, friends. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Fores. A Room in the Palace.

Flourish. Enter DUNCAN, MALCOLM, DONALBAIN,
LENOX, and Attendants.

Dun. Is execution done on Cawdor ? Are not^a
Those in comission yet return'd ?

Mal. My liege,
They are not yet come back. But I have spoke
With one that saw him die : who did report,
That very frankly he confess'd his treasons ;
Implor'd your highness' pardon ; and set forth
A deep repentance. Nothing in his life
Became him, like the leaving it ; he died
As one that had been studied in his death¹,

²³ The interim having weigh'd it. The interim is probably here used adverbially—"You having weighed it in the interim."

^a This is the reading of the second folio. The first has, "Or not."

¹ Studied in his death is well instructed in the art of dying. Montaigne, with whom Shakespeare was familiar, says, "in my time, three of the most execrable persons that I ever knew, in all abominations of life, and the most infamous, have been seen to lie very orderly and quietly, and in every circumstance composed even unto perfection."

To throw away the dearest thing he ow'd²,
As 'twere a careless trifle.

Dun. There's no art,
To find the mind's construction in the face³:
He was a gentleman on whom I built
An absolute trust.

Enter MACBETH, BANQUO, ROSSE, and ANGUS.

O worthiest cousin !

The sin of my ingratitude even now
Was heavy on me. Thou art so far before,
That swiftest wing of recompense is slow
To overtake thee : would, thou hadst less deserv'd ;
That the proportion both of thanks and payment
Might have been mine⁴ ! only I have left to say,
More is thy due than more than all can pay.

Macb. The service and the loyalty I owe,
In doing it, pays itself. Your highness' part
Is to receive our duties : and our duties
Are to your throne and state, children, and servants ;
Which do but what they should, by doing every thing
Safe toward your love and honour⁵.

"The behaviour of the thane of Cawdor corresponds in almost every circumstance with that of the unfortunate Earl of Essex, as related by Stow, p. 793. His asking the queen's forgiveness, his confession, repentance, and concern about behaving with propriety on the scaffold, are minutely described by that historian." Steevens thinks that an allusion was intended "to the severity of that justice which deprived the age of one of its greatest ornaments, and Southampton, Shakespeare's patron, of his dearest friend."

² Ow'd, i. e. owned, possessed.

³ We cannot construe the disposition of the mind by the lineaments of the face. In Shakespeare's ninety-third Sonnet we have a contrary assertion :—

"In many's looks the false heart's history Is writ."

⁴ It has been proposed to read, "Might have been more."

⁵ Safe toward your love and honour. Sir William Blackstone would read :—"Safe toward you love and honour ;" which he explains thus :—"Our duties are your children, and servants or

Dun. Welcome hither :
I have begun to plant thee, and will labour
To make thee full of growing.—Noble Banquo,
That hast no less deserv'd, nor must be known
No less to have done so ; let me enfold thee,
And hold thee to my heart.

Ban. There if I grow,
The harvest is your own.

Dun. My plenteous joys,
Wanton in fulness, seek to hide themselves
In drops of sorrow⁶.—Sons, kinsmen, thanes,
And you whose places are the nearest, know,
We will establish our estate upon
Our eldest, Malcolm ; whom we name hereafter,
The prince of Cumberland⁷ : which honour must vassals to your throne and state ; who do but what they should, by doing everything with a saving of their love and honour toward you." He says that it has reference to the old feudal simple homage, which when done to a subject was always accompanied with a saving clause—" saulf le foy que jeo doy a nostre seignor le roy ;" which he thinks suits well with the situation of Macbeth, now beginning to waver in his allegiance.

⁶ In drops of sorrow.

"Lachrymas non sponte cadentes
Effudit, gemitusque expressit pectore læto ;
Non aliter manifesta potens abscondere mentis
Gaudia, quam lachrymis."

Lucan, lib. ix.

The same sentiment again occurs in The Winter's Tale. It is likewise employed in the first scene of Much Ado about Nothing.

⁷ Holinshed says, "Duncan having two sons, &c. he made the elder of them, called Malcolm, prince of Cumberland, as it was thereby to appoint him his successor in his kingdom immediately after his decease, Macbeth sorely troubled herewith, for that he saw by this means his hope sore hindered (where, by the old laws of the realme the ordinance was, that if he that should succeed were not of able age to take the charge upon himself, he that was next of blood unto him should be admitted), he began to take counsel how he might usurpe the kingdom by force, having a just quarrel so to doe (as he tooke the matter) for that Duncan did what in him lay to defraud him of all manner of title and claime, which he might in time to come pretend, unto the crowne." Cumberland was anciently held as a fief of the English crown.

Not, unaccompanied, invest him only,
 But signs of nobleness, like stars, shall shine
 On all deservers.—From hence to Inverness,
 And bind us further to you.

Macb. The rest is labour, which is not us'd for you:
 I'll be myself the harbinger, and make joyful
 The hearing of my wife with your approach;
 So, humbly take my leave.

Dun. My worthy Cawdor!

Macb. The prince of Cumberland!—That is a step,
 On which I must fall down, or else o'erleap, [Aside.
 For in my way it lies. Stars, hide your fires!
 Let not light see my black and deep desires:
 The eye wink at the hand! yet let that be,
 Which the eye fears, when it is done, to see. [Exit.

Dun. True, worthy Banquo; he is full so valiant⁸;
 And in his commendations I am fed;
 It is a banquet to me. Let's after him,
 Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome:
 It is a peerless kinsman. [Flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE V. Inverness. A Room in Macbeth's Castle.

Enter LADY MACBETH, reading a Letter.

Lady M. They met me in the day of success; and I have learn'd by the perfect'st report, they have more in them than mortal knowledge. When I burnt in desire to question them further, they made themselves —air, into which they vanish'd. Whiles I stood rapt in the wonder of it, came missives¹ from the king,

⁸ True, worthy Banquo, &c. We must imagine that while Macbeth was uttering the six preceding lines, Duncan and Banquo had been conferring apart. Macbeth's conduct appears to have been their subject; and to some encomium supposed to have been bestowed on him by Banquo, the reply of Duncan refers.

who all-hail'd me, Thane of Cawdor ; by which title, before, these weird sisters saluted me, and referred me to the coming on of time, with, Hail, king that shalt be ! This have I thought good to deliver thee, my dearest partner of greatness ; that thou might'st not lose the dues of rejoicing, by being ignorant of what greatness is promised thee. Lay it to thy heart, and farewell.

Glamis thou art, and Cawdor ; and shalt be
 What thou art promis'd :—Yet do I fear thy nature ;
 It is too full o' the milk of human kindness,
 To catch the nearest way : Thou would'st be great ;
 Art not without ambition ; but without
 The illness should attend it. What thou would'st highly,

That would'st thou holily ; would'st not play false,
 And yet would'st wrongly win ; thou'dst have, great Glamis,

That which cries, Thus thou must do, if thou have it ;
 And that which rather thou dost fear to do,
 Than wishest should be undone². Hie thee hither,
 That I may pour my spirits in thine ear³ ;
 And chastise with the valour of my tongue
 All that impedes thee from the golden round,
 Which fate and metaphysical⁴ aid doth seem
 To have thee crown'd withal. [Enter an Attendant.]

What is your tidings ?

² "If thou would'st have that [i. e. the crown] which cries unto thee, thus thou must do, if thou would'st have it ; and thou must do that which rather," &c. Mr. Hunter says:—"There should be a pause at that in the third line, the mind supplying 'is a thing.'"

³ That I may pour my spirits in thine ear. So in Lord Sterling's Julius Cæsar, 1607 :—

"Thou in my bosom used to pour thy spright."

⁴ Which fate and metaphysical aid, &c. ; i. e. supernatural aid. We find metaphysics explained things supernatural in the old dictionaries. To have thee crown'd is to desire that you should be crown'd. Thus in All's Well that Ends Well :—

Attend. The king comes here to-night.

Lady M. Thou'rt mad to say it :
Is not thy master with him ? who, wer't so,
Would have inform'd for preparation.

Attend. So please you, it is true ; our thane is coming :
One of my fellows had the speed of him ;
Who, almost dead for breath, had scarcely more
Than would make up his message.

Lady M. Give him tending,
He brings great news. [Exit Attendant.] The raven himself is hoarse⁵,
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements. Come, you spirits
That tend on mortal⁶ thoughts, unsex me here ;
And fill me, from the crown to the toe, top-full
Of direst cruelty ! make thick my blood,
Stop up the access and passage to remorse ;

“ Our dearest friend
Prejudicates the business, and would seem
To have us make denial.”

This phrase of Baret's :—“ If all things be as ye would have them, or agreeable to your desire,” is a common mode of expression with old writers.

⁵ The raven himself is hoarse. The following passage from Drayton's Barons' Wars, Book v. St. 42, may serve as an elucidation of the text :—

Through his hoarse beak of following horror tells.”

⁶ That tend on mortal thoughts. Mortal here is put for deadly. In another part of this play we have “ the mortal sword,” and “ mortal murders.” “ Mortal war,” and “ mortal hatred,” were current phrases. In Nashe's Pierce Penniless is a particular description of these spirits, and of their office. “ The second kind of devils, which he most employeth, are those northern Martii, called the spirits of revenge, and the authors of massacres, and seedsmen of mischief ; for they have commission to incense men to rapines, sacrilege, theft, murder, wrath, fury, and all manner of cruelties : and they command certain of the southern spirits to wait upon them, as also great Arioch, that is termed the spirit of revenge.”

That no compunctious visitings of nature
 Shake my fell purpose, nor keep peace between
 The effect and it⁷! Come to my woman's breasts,
 And take my milk for gall, you murd'ring ministers,
 Wherever in your sightless substances
 You wait on nature's mischief! Come, thick night,
 And pall⁸ thee in the dunnest smoke of hell!
 That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
 Nor heaven peep through the blanket of the dark⁹,
 To cry, Hold, hold!—Great Glamis! worthy Cawdor!

⁷ The old copies have hit, the old form of the pronoun it, as Tooke has shown. Lady Macbeth's purpose was to be effected by action. "To keep peace between the effect and purpose," means, "to delay the execution of her purpose, to prevent its proceeding to effect." Sir Wm. Davenant's strange alteration of this play sometimes affords a reasonably good commentary upon it. Thus in the present instance:—

"Make thick

My blood, stop all passage to remorse;
 That no relapses into mercy may Shake my design, nor make it fall before
 'Tis ripen'd to effect."

⁸ To pall, from the Latin pallio, to wrap, to invest, to cover or hide, as with a mantle or cloak.

⁹ Drayton, in his Mortimeriados, 1596, has an expression resembling that in the text:—

"The sullen night in mistie RUGGE is wrapp'd."

And in his Polyolbion, which was not published till 1612, we again find it:—

"Thick vapours that like ruggs still hang the troubled air."

Coleridge has the following observation on this speech:—"Lady Macbeth, like all in Shakespeare, is a class individualized;—of high rank, left much alone, and feeding herself with day-dreams of ambition, she mistakes the courage of fantasy for the power of bearing the consequences and the realities of guilt. Hers is the mock fortitude of a mind deluded by ambition; she shames her husband with a superhuman audacity of fancy which she cannot support, but sinks in the season of remorse, and dies in suicidal agony. Her speech is that of one who had habitually familiarized her imagination to dreadful conceptions, and was trying to do so still more. Her invocations and requisitions are all the false efforts of a mind accustomed only hitherto to the shadows of the imagination, vivid enough to throw the every-day sub-

Greater than both, by the all-hail hereafter !
Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present¹⁰, and I feel now
The future in the instant.

Macb. My dearest love,
Duncan comes here to-night.

Lady M. And when goes hence ?

Macb. To-morrow,—as he purposes.

Lady M. O, never Shall sun that morrow see !

Your face, my thane, is as a book, where men
May read strange matters :—To beguile the time,
Look like the time ; bear welcome in your eye,
Your hand, your tongue : look like the innocent flower,

But be the serpent under it. He that's coming
Must be provided for : and you shall put
This night's great business into my despatch ;
Which shall to all our nights and days to come
Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom.

Macb. We will speak further.

Lady M. Only look up clear ;
To alter favour¹¹ ever is to fear :
Leave all the rest to me. [Exeunt.

stances of life into shadow, but never as yet brought into direct contact with their own correspondent realities."

¹⁰ This ignorant present, i. e. beyond the present time, which is, according to the process of nature, ignorant of the future.

SCENE VI. The same. Before the Castle.Hautboys. Servants of Macbeth attending.Enter DUNCAN, MALCOLM, DONALBAIN, BANQUO, LENOX, MACDUFF, ROSSE, ANGUS, and Attendants.

Dun. This castle hath a pleasant seat : the air
Nimbly and sweetly recommends itself
Unto our gentle senses.

Ban. This guest of summer,
The temple-haunting martlet, does approve,
By his lov'd mansionry, that the heaven's breath
Smells woingly here : no jutting, frieze,
Buttress, nor coigne of vantage¹, but this bird
Hath made his pendent bed, and procreant cradle :
Where they most breed and haunt, I have observ'd,
The air is delicate².

¹ Buttress nor coigne of vantage. Coigne is a corner-stone; the finish of a building at the angle. So in Coriolanus, Act v. Sc. 4 :—

“See you yon coigne o' the capitol? yon corner-stone.”

² “This short dialogue,” says Sir Joshua Reynolds, “has always appeared to me a striking instance of what in painting is termed repose. The conversation very naturally turns upon the beauty of the castle's situation, and the pleasantness of the air; and Banquo, observing the martlet's nests in every recess of the cornice, remarks, that where those birds most breed and haunt the air is delicate. The subject of this quiet and easy conversation gives that repose so necessary to the mind after the tumultuous bustle of the preceding scenes, and perfectly contrasts the scene of horror that immediately succeeds. It seems as if Shakespeare asked himself, What is a prince likely to say to his attendants on such an occasion? Whereas the modern writers seem, on the contrary, to be always searching for new thoughts, such as would never occur to men in the situation which is represented. This also is frequently the practice of Homer, who, from the midst of battles and horrors relieves and refreshes the mind of the reader, by introducing some quiet rural image or picture of familiar domestic life.” It is very incorrectly given in both the folios: where we have barlet for martlet, must for most, and absurd

Enter LADY MACBETH.

Dun. See, see ! our honour'd hostess !
The love that follows us, sometime is our trouble,
Which still we thank as love. Herein I teach you,
How you shall bid God yield³ us for your pains,
And thank us for your trouble.

Lady M. All our service,
In every point twice done, and then done double,
Were poor and single business, to contend
Against those honours deep and broad, wherewith
Your majesty loads our house : For those of old,
And the late dignities heap'd up to them,
We rest your hermits⁴.

Dun. Where's the thane of Cawdor
We cours'd him at the heels, and had a purpose
To be his purveyor : but he rides well :
And his great love, sharp as his spur, hath holp him
To his home before us : Fair and noble hostess,
We are your guest to-night.

Lady M. Your servants ever
Have theirs, themselves, and what is theirs, in compt⁵,
To make their audit at your highness' pleasure,
Still to return your own.

Dun. Give me your hand :

punctuation. Mr. Hunter might well remark "how carelessly the original editors performed their duties, at least in the first act of this tragedy."

³ How you shall bid God yield us, i. e. how you shall pray God reward us. "We use it," says Palsgrave, "by manner of thanking a person." Mr. Hunter thus explains the passage:—"The affection which urges us to desire the society of our friends is sometimes the occasion of trouble to them, but we still feel grateful for the affection which is manifested. So you are to regard this visit; and with this view of it you will be disposed to thank us for the trouble we occasion you."

⁴ i. e. we as hermits, or beadsmen, shall ever pray for you.

⁵ In compt, i. e. subject to accompt.

Conduct me to mine host ; we love him highly,
 And shall continue our graces towards him.
 By your leave, hostess. [Exeunt.

Hautboys and Torches. Enter, and pass over the Stage, a Sewer¹, and divers Servants with Dishes and Service. Then enter MACBETH.

Macb. If it were done, when 'tis done, then 'twere well
 It were done quickly : If the assassination
 Could trammel up the consequence, and catch,
 With his surcease, success ; that but this blow
 Might be the be-all and the end-all here,
 But here, upon this bank and shoal of Time ;
 We'd jump the life to come². But, in these cases,
 We still have judgment here ; that we but teach
 Bloody instructions, which, being taught, return
 To plague the inventor : This even handed justice
 Commends⁴ the ingredients of our poison'd chalice

¹ A sewer, an officer so called from his placing the dishes on the table. Asseour, French ; from asseoir, to place.

² The meaning of this passage appears to be :—" 'Twere well it were done quickly, if, when 'tis done, it were done (or at an end) ; and that no sinister consequences would ensue. If the assassination, at the same time that it puts an end to Duncan's life, could make success certain, and that I might enjoy the crown unmolested ;—if the blow ended the matter here, i. e. in the present world, we'd jump the life to come, i. e. hazard or run the risk of what may happen in a future state." To trammel up was to confine or tie up. The legs of horses were trammeled to teach them to amble. Surcease is cessation. "To surcease or to cease from doing something : supersedeo, Lat. ; cesser, Fr."—Baret. In the previous line the old copy has schoole for shoal.

⁴ To commend was anciently used in the sense of the Latin commendo, to commit, to address, to direct, to recommend. Thus in All's Well that Ends Well :—

" Commend the paper to his gracious hand."
 And in King Henry VIII.—"The king's majesty commends his

To our own lips. He's here in double trust :
 First, as I am his kinsman and his subject,
 Strong both against the deed ; then, as his host,
 Who should against his murderer shut the door,
 Not bear the knife myself. Besides, this Duncan Hath borne his faculties so meek, hath been
 So clear in his great office, that his virtues
 Will plead like angels, trumpet-tongued, against
 The deep damnation of his taking off :
 And pity, like a naked new-born babe,
 Striding the blast, or heaven's cherubin, hors'd
 Upon the sightless couriers⁵ of the air,
 Shall blow the horrid deed in every eye,
 That tears shall drown the wind.—I have no spur
To prick the sides of my intent, but only
Vaulting ambition⁶, which o'erleaps itself,
And falls on the other—How now ! what news ?

Enter LADY MACBETH.

Lady M. He has almost supp'd : Why have you good opinion to you." In a subsequent scene of this play we have :—

" I wish your horses swift and sure of foot,

And so I do commend you to their backs."

"The pricke of conscience," says Holinshed, "caused him ever to feare, lest he should be served of the same cup as he had ministered to his predecessor."

⁵ The sightless couriers of the air are what the poet elsewhere calls the viewless winds. Thus in Warner's Albion's England :—
 "The scouring winds that sightless in the sounding air do fly."
 b. ii. c. xi.

⁶ So in the Tragedy of Cæsar and Pompey, 1607 :—

"Why think you, lords, that 'tis ambition's spur

That pricketh Cæsar to these high attempts?"

Malone has observed that "there are two distinct metaphors in this passage. I have no spur to prick the sides of my intent ; I have nothing to stimulate me to the execution of my purpose but ambition, which is apt to overreach itself ; this he expresses by the second image, of a person meaning to vault into his saddle, who, by taking too great a leap, will fall on the other side."

Macb. Hath he ask'd for me?

Lady M. Know you not, he has?

Macb. We will proceed no further in this business:
He hath honour'd me of late; and I have bought
Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss,
Not cast aside so soon.

Lady M. Was the hope drunk,
Wherein you dress'd yourself? hath it slept since?
And wakes it now, to look so green and pale
At what it did so freely? From this time,
Such I account thy love. Art thou afeard
To be the same in thine own act and valour,
As thou art in desire? Would'st thou have that
Which thou esteem'st the ornament of life,
And live a coward in thine own esteem;
Letting I dare not wait upon I would,
Like the poor cat i' the adage⁷?

Macb. Pr'ythee, peace:
I dare do all that may become a man;
Who dares do more⁸, is none.

Lady M. What beast⁹ was't then,
That made you break this enterprise to me?
When you durst do it, then you were a man;
And, to be more than what you were, you would Be so much more the man. Nor time, nor place,
Did then adhere¹⁰, and yet you would make both:

⁷ The adage of the cat is among Heywood's Proverbs, 1566:—"The cat would eate fishe, and would not wet her feete."

⁸ Who dares do more, is none. The old copy, instead of "do more," reads "no more:" the emendation is Rowe's. A similar passage occurs in Measure for Measure, Act ii. Sc. 4:—

"Be that you are,

That is a woman: if you're more, you're none."

⁹ It has here been suggested to read "What boast was't then;" but the opposition between man and beast was evidently intended; and to break the project of the murder could hardly be called a boast.

¹⁰ Adhere, in the same sense as cohere.

They have made themselves, and that their fitness now
Does unmake you. I have given suck ; and know
How tender 'tis to love the babe that milks me :
I would, while it was smiling in my face,
Have pluck'd my nipple from his boneless gums,
And dash'd the brains out, had I so sworn, as you
Have done to this.

Macb.

If we should fail !

Lady M.

We fail.

But screw your courage to the sticking-place¹¹,
And we'll not fail. When Duncan is asleep
(Whereto the rather shall his day's hard journey Soundly invite him), his two chamberlains¹²
Will I with wine and wassel¹³ so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume, and the receipt of reason
A limbeck¹⁴ only : When in swinish sleep
Their drenched natures lie, as in a death,
What cannot you and I perform upon
The unguarded Duncan ? what not put upon
His spongy officers ; who shall bear the guilt

¹² The circumstance relative to Macbeth's slaughter of Duncan's chamberlains is copied from Holinshed's account of King Duffe's murder by Donwald.

¹³ Wassel is thus explained by Bullokar in his Expositor, 1616 : "Wassaile, a term usual heretofore for quaffing and carousing ; but more especially signifying a merry cup (ritually composed, dect and fill'd with country liquor) passing about amongst neighbours, meeting and entertaining one another on the vigil or eve of the new year, and commonly called the wassail-bol." See Hamlet, Act i. Sc. 4.

To convince is to overcome. See p. 94, Act iv. Sc. 3, of this play.

¹⁴ A limbeck, or alembic, is a vessel through which distilled liquors pass, in the state of fumes or vapour, into the recipient. So shall the receipt, i. e. receptacle, of reason be like this empty vessel.

Of our great quell¹⁵?

Macb. Bring forth men-children only!
For thy undaunted mettle should compose
Nothing but males. Will it not be receiv'd,
When we have mark'd with blood those sleepy two
Of his own chamber, and us'd their very daggers,
That they have done't?

Lady M. Who dares receive it other,
As we shall make our griefs and clamour roar
Upon his death?

Macb. I am settled, and bend up
Each corporal agent to this terrible feat.
Away, and mock the time with fairest show;
False face must hide what the false heart doth know.

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I. The same. Court within the Castle.

Enter BANQUO and FLEANCE, and a Servant, with a Torch before them.

Banquo.

HOW goes the night, boy?

Fle. The moon is down: I have not heard the clock.

Ban. And she goes down at twelve.

Fle. I take't, 'tis later, sir.

Ban. Hold, take my sword:—There's husbandry¹ in heaven,

Their candles are all out.—Take thee that too.
A heavy summons lies like lead upon me,

¹⁵ Quell is murder; from the Saxon quellan, to kill.

¹ Husbandry here means thrift, frugality. In Romeo and Juliet we have a similar expression:—

“Night's candles are burnt out”

And yet I would not sleep : Merciful powers !
 Restrain in me the cursed thoughts, that nature
 Gives way to in repose² :—Give me my sword ;—

Enter MACBETH, and a Servant with a Torch.

Who's there ?

Macb. A friend.

Ban. What, sir, not yet at rest ? The king's a-bed :
 He hath been in unusual pleasure, and
 Sent forth great largess³ to your offices⁴ :
 This diamond he greets your wife withal,
 By the name of most kind hostess ; and shut up⁵
 In measureless content.

Macb. Being unprepar'd,
 Our will became the servant to defect ;
 Which else should free have wrought⁶.

Ban.

All's well.

² It is apparent from what Banquo says afterwards, that he had been solicited in a dream to attempt something in consequence of the prophecy of the witches, that his waking senses were shocked at ; and Shakespeare has here most exquisitely contrasted his character with that of Macbeth. Banquo is praying against being tempted to encourage thoughts of guilt even in his sleep ; while Macbeth is hurrying into temptation, and revolving in his mind every scheme, however flagitious, that may assist him to complete his purpose. The one is unwilling to sleep, lest the same phantoms should assail his resolution again, while the other is depriving himself of rest through impatience to commit the murder.

³ Largess, i. e. bounty.

⁴ The old copy reads offices, which has been sometimes changed to officers ; but by offices the domestic servants of the household are intended.

⁶ "Being unprepared, our will (or desire to entertain the king honourably) became the servant to defect (i. e. was constrained by defective means, which else should free have wrought i. e. otherwise our zeal should have been manifest by more liberal entertainments." Which relates not to the last antecedent, defect, but to will.

I dreamt last night of the three weird sisters :
To you they have show'd some truth.

Macb.

I think not of them :

Yet, when we can entreat an hour to serve,
We would spend it in some words upon that business,
If you would grant the time.

Ban.

At your kind'st leisure.

Macb. If you shall cleave to my consent⁷,—when 'tis,

It shall make honour for you.

Ban.

So I lose none,

In seeking to augment it, but still keep
My bosom franchis'd, and allegiance clear,
I shall be counsel'd.

Macb.

Good repose, the while !

⁷ Consent is accord, agreement, a combination for a particular purpose. By "If you shall cleave to my consent," Macbeth means, "If you shall adhere to me, i. e. agree or accord with my views, when 'tis, i. e. when events shall fall out as they are predicted, it shall make honour for you." We have the word again in this sense in King Henry IV. Part II., where, speaking of Shallow and his servants, Falstaff says, "they flock together in consent like so many wild geese." So again in As You Like It, the usurping Duke says, after the flight of Rosalind and Celia :—

"Some villains of my court

Are of consent and sufferance in this."

Sir William Davenant's paraphrase of this passage shows that he understood it as I have explained it :—

"If when the prophecy begins to look like, you will Adhere to me, it shall make honour for you."

Macbeth mentally refers to the crown which he expected to obtain in consequence of the murder that he was about to commit. We comprehend all that passes in his mind ; but Banquo is still in ignorance of it. His reply is only that of a man who determines to combat every possible temptation to do ill ; and therefore expresses a resolve that, in spite of future combinations of interest or struggles for power, he will attempt nothing that may obscure his present honours, alarm his conscience, or corrupt loyalty. Macbeth could never mean, while yet the success of his attack on the life of Duncan was uncertain, to afford Banquo the most dark or distant hint of his criminal designs on the crown. Had he acted thus incautiously, Banquo would naturally have become his accuser as soon as the murder had been discovered.

Ban. Thanks, sir ; The like to you !

[Exit BANQUO and FLEANCE.

Macb. Go, bid thy mistress, when my drink is ready,
She strike upon the bell. Get thee to bed.

[Exit Servant.

Is this a dagger, which I see before me,
The handle toward my hand ? Come, let me clutch
thee :

I have thee not, and yet I see thee still.
Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible
To feeling, as to sight ? or art thou but
A dagger of the mind ; a false creation,
Proceeding from the heat-oppresed brain ?
I see thee yet, in form as palpable
As this which now I draw.

Thou marshal'st me the way that I was going ;
And such an instrument I was to use.
Mine eyes are made the fools o' the other senses,
Or else worth all the rest : I see thee still ;
And on thy blade, and dudgeon⁸, gouts⁹ of blood,
Which was not so before.—There's no such thing :
It is the bloody business, which informs
Thus to mine eyes.—Now o'er the one half world
Nature seems dead¹⁰, and wicked dreams abuse

⁸ Dudgeon for handle ; “ a dudgeon dagger is a dagger whose handle is made of the root of box,” according to Bishop Wilkins in the dictionary subjoined to his Real Character. Dudgeon is the root of box. It has not been remarked that there is a peculiar propriety in giving the word to Macbeth, the Scottish daggers having generally the handles of box-wood. Thus Torriano has :—“ a Scotch or dudgeon haft dagger.”

⁹ Gouts, i. e. drops ; from the French gouttes.

¹⁰ Dryden's well-known lines in the Conquest of Mexico are here transcribed that the reader may observe the contrast between them and this passage of Shakespeare :—

“ All things are hush'd as Nature's self lay dead,
The mountains seem to nod their drowsy head,
The little birds in dreams their songs repeat,
And sleeping flow'rs beneath the night dews sweat,

The curtain'd sleeper¹¹ ; witchcraft celebrates
 Pale Hecate's offerings ; and wither'd murder,
 Alarum'd by his sentinel, the wolf,
 Whose howl's his watch, thus with his stealthy paece,
 With Tarquin's ravishing strides, towards his design Moves like a ghost¹².——Thou sure¹³ and firm-set earth,

Hear not my steps, which way they walk, for fear
 Thy very stones prate of my where-about,

Even lust and envy sleep !”

In the second part of Marston's Antonio and Mellida, 1602, we have the following lines :—

“’Tis yet the dead of night, yet all the earth is clutch'd
 In the dull leaden hand of snoring sleep :
 No breath disturbs the quiet of the air,
 No spirit moves upon the breast of earth,
 Save howling dogs, night-crows, and screeching owls,
 Save meagre ghosts, Piero, and black thoughts.

I am great in blood,
 Unequalled in revenge :—you horrid scouts
 That sentinel swart night, give loud applause
 From your large palms.”

¹¹ The old copy has sleeps. The emendation was proposed by Steevens, and is well worthy of a place in the text ; the word now having been formerly admitted to complete the metre. We have afterwards :— “ A hideous trumpet call to parley

The sleepers of the house.”

¹² The old copy reads sides : Pope made the alteration. Thus in The Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. viii.—

“ With easy steps so soft as foot could stride.”

In other places we have an easy stride, a leisurable stride, &c. And the poet himself, in his Rape of Lucrece :—

“ Into the chamber wickedly he stalks,
 And gazeth on her yet unstained bed.”

Warburton observes, that the justness of the similitude is not very obvious. But a stanza from the same poem will explain it :—

“ Now stole upon the time in dead of night,
 When heavy sleep had clos'd up mortal eyes ;
 No comfortable star did lend his light,
 No noise but owls' and wolves' dead-boding cries ;
 Now serves the season that they may surprize
 The silly lambs. Pure thoughts are dead and still,
 While lust and murder wake to stain and kill.”

¹³ The old copies, by a misprint, have sowre ; and in the next line, “ which they may walk.”

And take the present horror from the time,
Which now suits with it¹⁴.—Whiles I threat, he lives;
Words to the heat of deeds too cold breath gives.

[A bell rings

I go, and it is done; the bell invites me.
Hear it not, Duncan; for it is a knell
That summons thee to heaven, or to hell. [Exit.

SCENE II. *The same*¹.

Enter LADY MACBETH.

Lady M. That which hath made them drunk, hath made me bold :

¹⁴ Macbeth would have nothing break through the universal silence that added such horror to the night, as well suited with the bloody deed he was about to perform. Burke, in his Essay on the Sublime and Beautiful, observes, that “all general privations are great because they are terrible.” The poets of antiquity have many of them heightened their scenes of terror by dwelling on the silence which accompanied them:—

“Dii quibus imperium et animarum umbræque silentes,

Et Chaos et Phlegethon, loca nocte tucentia late.”—Virgil.

Stattius, in describing the Lemnian massacre, notices the silence and solitude in a striking manner:—

“Conticuere domus,” &c.

and when he enumerates the terrors to which Chiron had familiarized his pupil, he subjoins:—

“Nec ad vastæ trepidare silentia sylvæ.”

Tacitus, describing the distress of the Roman army, under Cæcina, concludes by observing—“Ducemque terruit, dira quies.” In all the preceding passages, as Pliny remarks, concerning places of worship, silentia ipsa adoramus. To these instances adduced by Stevens, Malone adds another from the second Æneid:—

“Vestigia retro

Observata sequor per noctem, et lumine lustro,

Horror ubique animos, simul ipsa silentia terrent.”

and the well known lines which exposed Dryden to so much ridicule:—

“A horrid stillness first invades the ear,

And in that silence we the tempest hear.”

¹ This can hardly be called a new scene, as there is no change of place.

What hath quench'd them, hath given me fire :—
 Hark !—Peace !—It was the owl that shriek'd,
 The fatal bellman, which gives the stern'st good-night.
 He is about it : The doors are open ;
 And the surfeited grooms do mock their charge with snores :

I have drugg'd their possets,
 That death and nature do contend about them,
 Whether they live or die.

Macb. [Within.] Who's there ?—what, ho !

Lady M. Alack ! I am afraid they have awak'd,
 And 'tis not done :—the attempt and not the deed,
 Confounds us :—Hark !—I laid their daggers ready,
 He could not miss 'em Had he not resembled
 My father as he slept, I had done't.—My husband !

Enter MACBETH.

Macb. I have done the deed :—Didst thou not hear a noise ?

Lady M. I heard the owl scream, and the crickets cry.

Did not you speak ?

Macb. When ?

Lady M. Now.

Macb. As I descended ?

Lady M. Ay.

Macb. Hark !—

Who lies i' the second chamber ?

Lady M. Donalbain.

Macb. This is a sorry sight. [Looking on his hands.]

Lady M. A foolish thought, to say a sorry sight.

Macb. There's one did laugh in his sleep,
 And one cried, Murder ! that they did wake each other ;

I stood and heard them : but they did say their prayers,

And address'd them again to sleep.

Lady M. There are two lodg'd together.

Macb. One cried, God bless us! and, Amen, the other ;

As they had seen me, with these hangman's hands.

Listening their fear ; I could not say, " Amen,"

When they did say, God bless us.

Lady M. Consider it not so deeply.

Macb. But wherefore could not I pronounce, Amen? I had most need of blessing, and Amen stuck in my throat.

Lady M. These deeds must not be thought after these ways ; so, it will make us mad.

Macb. Methought, I heard a voice cry, " Sleep no more!"

Macbeth does murder sleep!—the innocent sleep ;

Sleep, that knits up the ravell'd sleeve² of care,

The death of each day's life, sore labour's bath,

Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course,

Chief nourisher in life's feast ;"—

Lady M. What do you mean ?

Macb. Still it cried, " Sleep no more!" to all the house :

" Glamis hath murder'd sleep ; and therefore Cawdor shall sleep no more. Macbeth shall sleep no more³ !"

² Sleave, or sleyd silk, is unwrought silk, sometimes also called floss silk. It appears to be the coarse ravelled part separated by passing through the sley [slaie or reed-comb] of the weaver's loom ; and hence called sleaved or sleyed silk. I suspect that sleeveless, which has puzzled the etymologists, is that which cannot be sleaved, sleyded, or unravelled ; and therefore useless : thus a sleeveless errand would be a fruitless one. See Troilus and Cressida, Act v. Sc. 1, note 7. Mr. Knight is mistaken in thinking " sleided silk," in A Lover's Complaint, to mean twisted silk. Floss silk was the material most in use for the purpose of sealing letters. I have seen numerous old letters so fastened.

³ Mr. Boswell thus explains this passage :—Glamis hath murder'd sleep ; and therefore my lately acquired dignity can afford no comfort to one who suffers the agony of remorse,—Cawdor

Lady M. Who was it that thus cried? Why, worthy thane,

You do unbend your noble strength, to think
So brainsickly of things: Go, get some water,
And wash this filthy witness from your hand.—
 Why did you bring these daggers from the place?
 They must lie there: Go, carry them; and smear
 The sleepy grooms with blood.

Macb. I'll go no more:
 I am afraid to think what I have done;
 Look on't again, I dare not.

Lady M. Infirm of purpose!
 Give me the daggers: The sleeping, and the dead,
 Are but as pictures: 'tis the eye of childhood,
 That fears a painted devil. If he do bleed,
 I'll gild the faces of the grooms withal,
 For it must seem their guilt⁴.

[Exit. Knocking within
Macb. Whence is that knocking?
 How is't with me, when every noise appals me?
 What hands are here! Ha! they pluck out mine eyes!
 Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood⁵ shall sleep no more; nothing can restore me to that peace of mind which I enjoyed in a comparatively humble state; the once innocent Macbeth shall sleep no more.

⁴ This quibble occurs frequently in old plays. Shakespeare has it again in King Henry IV. Part II. Act iv. Sc. 4:—

“England shall double gild his treble guilt.”

And in King Henry V.—

“Have for the gilt of France, O guilt indeed.”

“Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood,” &c.

⁵ Suscipit, ô Gellii, quantum non ultima Tethys,
Nec genitor nympharum abluit oceanus.

Catullus in Gellium, 83.

Οἶμαι γὰρ εἶ' ἄν Ιστρον, ἔτε Φᾶσιν ἄν
 Νίψαι καθαρμῶ τήνδε τήν στέγην.

Sophoc. Oιδιπ. 1228

Quis eluet me Tanais? aut quæ barbaris
 Mæotis undis Pontico incumbens mari?
 Non ipse toto magnus oceano pater

Clean from my hand? No; this my hand will rather
The multitudinous seas incarnardine⁶,
Making the green—one red⁷.

Re-enter LADY MACBETH.

Lady M. My hands are of your colour; but I shame
To wear a heart so white. [Knock.] I hear a knocking
At the south entry:—retire we to our chamber:
A little water clears us of this deed:
How easy is it then! Your constancy
Hath left you unattended⁸.—[Knocking.] Hark!
more knocking:
Get on your nightgown, lest occasion call us,
And show us to be watchers:—Be not lost
So poorly in your thoughts.

Macb. To know my deed, 'twere best not know myself⁹. [Knock.] Wake Duncan with thy knocking! Ay, would thou could'st? [Exeunt.]

Tantum expiravit sceleris! Senec. Hippol.
Non, si Neptuni fluctu renovare operam des,
Non, mare si totum velit eluere omnibus undis.

Lucret. l. vi. ver. 1074.

Thus also, in The Insatiate Countess, by Marston, 1613:—

“Although the waves of all the northern sea
Should flow for ever through these guilty hands,
Yet the sanguinolent stain would extant be.”

⁶ To incarnardine is to stain of a red colour.

⁷ In the old copy this line stands thus:—

The punctuation in the text was adopted by Steevens at the suggestion of Murphy. In Heywood's Robert Earl of Huntingdon we have a similar passage:—

“The multitudes of seas dyed red with blood.”

⁸ Your constancy hath left you unattended, i. e. your courage has deserted you. Vide note 13 on King Henry V. Act v. Sc. 2, p. 411.

⁹ This is an answer to Lady Macbeth's reproof. “While I have the thoughts of this deed, it were best not know, or be lost to myself.” In the next line the folio has “I would.”

SCENE III. The same.

Enter a Porter. [Knocking within.]

Porter. Here's a knocking, indeed! If a man were porter of hell-gate, he should have old¹ turning the key. [Knocking.] Knock, knock, knock: Who's there, i' the name of Belzebub? Here's a farmer², that hanged himself on the expectation of plenty: Come in time; have napkins³ enow about you; here you'll sweat for't. [Knocking.] Knock, knock: Who's there, i' the other devil's name? 'Faith, here's an equivocator⁴, that could swear in both the scales against either scale; who committed treason enough for God's sake, yet could not equivocate to heaven: O, come in, equivocator. [Knocking.] Knock, knock, knock; Who's there? 'Faith, here's an English tailor come hither, for stealing out of a French hose: Come in, tailor; here you may roast your goose. [Knocking.] Knock, knock: Never at quiet! What are you?— But this place is too cold for hell. I'll devil-porter it no further: I had thought to have let in some of all professions, that go the primrose way to the everlasting bonfire⁵. [Knocking.] Anon, anon; I pray you, remember the porter. [Opens the gate.]

² Here's a farmer, that hanged himself on the expectation of plenty. So in Hall's Satires, b. iv. sat. 6:—

“Each muckworme will be rich with lawless gaine,
Altho' he smother up mowes of seven yeares graine,
And hang'd himself when corne grows cheap againe.”

³ Napkins, i. e. handkerchiefs. In the dictionaries of the time sudarium is rendered by napkin or handkerchief, wherewith we wipe away the sweat.

⁴ An equivocator, i. e. a Jesuit. That order were troublesome to the state, and held in odium in the reigns of Elizabeth and James. They were inventors of the execrable doctrine of equivocation.

⁵ So in Hamlet:—

Enter MACDUFF and LENOX.

Macd. Was it so late, friend, ere you went to bed,
That you do lie so late?

Port. 'Faith, sir, we were carousing till the second cock⁶: and drink, sir, is a great provoker of three things.

Macd. What three things does drink especially provoke?

Port. Marry, sir, nose-painting, sleep, and urine.
Lechery, sir, it provokes, and unprovokes: it provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance: Therefore, much drink may be said to be an equivocator with lechery: it makes him, and it mars him; it sets him on, and it takes him off; it persuades him, and disheartens him; makes him stand to, and not stand to: in conclusion, equivocates him in a sleep, and, giving him the lie, leaves him.

Macd. I believe, drink gave thee the lie last night.

Port. That it did, sir, i' the very throat o' me: But I requited him for his lie; and, I think, being too strong for him, though he took up my legs sometime, yet I made a shift to cast him.

Macd. Is thy master stirring?—
Our knocking has awak'd him; here he comes.

Enter MACBETH.

Len. Good-morrow, noble sir!

Macb. Good-morrow, both!

Macd. Is the king stirring, worthy thane?

“Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads.”
And in All's Well that Ends Well:—“The flowery way that leads to the great fire.”

⁶ i. e. till three o'clock, according to a passage in Romeo and Juliet:—

“The second cock has crow'd,
The curfew bell has toll'd: 'tis three o'clock.”

Macb.

Not yet.

Macd. He did command me to call timely on him ;
I have almost slipp'd the hour.

Macb.

I'll bring you to him.

Macd. I know, this is a joyful trouble to you ;
But yet, 'tis one.

Macb. The labour we delight in, physicks⁷ pain.
This is the door.

Macd.

I'll make so bold to call,

For 'tis my limited service⁸. [Exit MACDUFF.]

Len. Goes the king hence to-day ?

Macb. He does : he did appoint so.

Len. The night has been unruly ; where we lay,
Our chimneys were blown down ; and, as they say,
Lamentings heard i' the air ; strange screams of death ;
And prophesying, with accents terrible,
Of dire combustion, and confus'd events ;
New-hatch'd to the woful time,
The obscure bird clamour'd the livelong night ;
Some say, the earth was feverous, and did shake.

Macb. 'Twas a rough night.

Len. My young remembrance cannot parallel
A fellow to it.

Re-enter MACDUFF.

Macd. Oh horror ! horror ! horror ! Tongue, nor heart,
Cannot conceive, nor name thee⁹ !

Macb. Len.

What's the matter ?

Macd. Confusion now hath made his masterpiece !
Most sacrilegious murder hath broke ope

⁷ i. e. alleviates it. Physick is defined by Baret, a remedie, an helping or curing. So in The Tempest :—

“ There be some sports are painful ; and their labour Delight in them sets off.”

⁸ Limited service, i. e. service I am allowed to do.

⁹ It has been already observed that Shakespeare uses two negatives, not to make an affirmative, but to deny more strongly.

The Lord's anointed temple, and stole thence
The life o' the building.

Macb. What is't you say? the life?

Len. Mean you his majesty?

Macd. Approach the chamber, and destroy your sight
With a new Gorgon:—Do not bid me speak;
See, and then speak yourselves.—Awake! awake!—

[Exeunt MACBETH and LENOX.

Ring the alarum-bell:—Murder! and treason!
Banquo, and Donalbain! Malcolm! awake!
Shake off this downy sleep, death's counterfeit,
And look on death itself!—up, up, and see
The great doom's image.—Malcolm! Banquo!
As from your graves rise up, and walk like sprites,
To countenance this horror!—Ring the bell.

[Bell rings.

Enter LADY MACBETH.

Lady M. What's the business,
That such a hideous trumpet calls to parley
The sleepers of the house? speak, speak,——

Macd. O, gentle lady,
'Tis not for you to hear what I can speak:
The repetition, in a woman's ear,
Would murder as it fell¹⁰.——

Enter BANQUO.

O Banquo! Banquo! our royal master's murder'd!

Lady M. Woe, alas! what, in our house?

¹⁰ “The repetition, in a woman's ear,
Would murder as it fell.”

So in Hamlet:—

“He would drown the stage with tears,

And cleave the general ear with horrid speech.”

And in The Puritan, 1607:—“The punishments that shall follow you in this world would with horror kill the ear, should hear them related.”

Ban. Too cruel, any where.
Dear Duff, I pr'ythee, contradict thyself,
And say, it is not so.

Re-enter MACBETH and LENOX.

Macb. Had I but died an hour before this chance,
I had liv'd a blessed time ; for, from this instant,
'There's nothing serious in mortality :
All is but toys : renown, and grace, is dead ;
'The wine of life is drawn, and the mere lees
Is left this vault to brag of.

Enter MALCOLM and DONALBAIN.

Don. What is amiss ?

Macb. You are, and do not know't :
'The spring, the head, the fountain of your blood
Is stopp'd ; the very source of it is stopp'd.

Macd. Your royal father's murder'd.

Mal. O, by whom ?

Len. Those of his chamber, as it seem'd, had done't :
Their hands and faces were all badg'd with blood,
So were their daggers, which, unwip'd, we found
Upon their pillows : they star'd, and were distracted ;
No man's life was to be trusted with them.

Macb. O, yet I do repent me of my fury,
That I did kill them.

Macd. Wherefore did you so ?

Macb. Who can be wise, amaz'd, temperate, and furious,
Loyal and neutral, in a moment ? No man :
The expedition of my violent love
Outran the pauser reason.—Here lay Duncan,
His silver skin lac'd with his golden blood¹¹ ;

¹¹ His silver skin lac'd with his golden blood. To gild with blood is a very common phrase in old plays. See also King John, Act ii. Sc. 2. Johnson says, "It is not improbable that Shakespeare put these forced and unnatural metaphors into the mouth

And his gash'd stabs look'd like a breach in nature,
 For ruin's wasteful entrance: there, the murderers,
 Steep'd in the colours of their trade, their daggers Unmannerly breech'd with gore¹²: Who could refrain,

That had a heart to love, and in that heart
 Courage, to make his love known?

Lady M. Help me hence, ho!

Macd. Look to the lady.

Mal. Why do we hold our tongues,
 That most may claim this argument for ours?

Don. What should be spoken here,
 Where our fate, hid in an auger-hole,
 May rush, and seize us? Let's away; our tears

Are not yet brew'd.

Mal. Nor our strong sorrow
 Upon the foot of motion.

Ban. Look to the lady:—

[LADY MACBETH is carried out.]

And when we have our naked frailties hid¹³,
 That suffer in exposure, let us meet,
 And question this most bloody piece of work,
 To know it further. Fears and scruples shake us:
 In the great hand of God I stand; and, thence, of Macbeth, as a mark of artifice and dissimulation, to show the difference between the studied language of hypocrisy and the natural outcries of sudden passion. This whole speech, so considered, is a remarkable instance of judgment, as it consists of antithesis only."

¹² Breech'd with gore, i. e. covered with blood to their hilts.

¹³ i. e. when we have clothed our half-dressed bodies. The Porter had already said that this "place is too cold for hell," meaning the court-yard of the castle in which Banquo and the rest now are. So in Timon of Athens:—

"Call the creatures
 Whose naked natures live in all the spight
 Of wreakful heaven."

Against the undivulg'd pretence¹⁴ I fight
Of treasonous malice.

Macd. And so do I.

All. So all.

Macb. Let's briefly put on manly readiness,
And meet i' the hall together.

All. Well contented.

[Exeunt all but MAL. and DON

Mal. What will you do? Let's not consort with them :

To show an unfelt sorrow is an office
Which the false man does easy: I'll to England.

Don. To Ireland, I; our separated fortune
Shall keep us both the safer: where we are,
There's daggers in men's smiles: the near in blood,
The nearer bloody¹⁵.

Mal. This murderous shaft that's shot,
Hath not yet lighted¹⁶; and our safest way
Is, to avoid the aim. Therefore, to horse;
And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,

¹⁴ Pretence is here put for design or intention. It is so used again in The Winter's Tale:—

"The pretence whereof being by circumstance partly laid open." Thus again in the next scene:—

"What good could they pretend;"

i. e. intend to themselves: in the sense of the Latin prætendo, "to design or lay for a thing before it come," as the old dictionaries explain it. Banquo's meaning is—"in our present state of doubt and uncertainty about this murder, I have nothing to do but to put myself under the direction of God; and, relying on his support, I here declare myself an eternal enemy to this treason, and to all its further designs that have not yet come to light."

¹⁵ The near in blood,

The nearer bloody."

Meaning that he suspects Macbeth to be the murderer: for he was the nearest in blood to the two princes, being the cousin-german of Duncan.

¹⁶ The allusion of the unlighted shaft appears to be—"The murderous shaft has not yet done all its intended mischief; I and my brother stand in the way of its aim, yet to be destroyed before it will reach its mark and do no more harm."

But shift away : There's warrant in that theft
Which steals itself, when there's no mercy left.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Without the Castle.

Enter ROSSE and an Old Man.

Old M. Threescore and ten I can remember well .
Within the volume of which time, I have seen
Hours dreadful, and things strange ; but this sore night
Hath trifled former knowings.

Rosse. Ah, good father,
Thou see'st, the heavens, as troubled with man's act,
Threaten his bloody stage : by th' clock, 'tis day,
And yet dark night strangles the travelling lamp :
Is't night's predominance, or the day's shame,
That darkness does the face of earth entomb,
When living light should kiss it¹ ?

Old M. 'Tis unnatural,
Even like the deed that's done. On Tuesday last,
A falcon, tow'ring in her pride of place²,
Was by a mousing owl hawk'd at, and kill'd.

² A falcon tow'ring in her pride of place, a technical phrase in falconry for soaring to the highest pitch. Falcon haultain was the French term for a towering or high flying hawk. Mr. Dyce has cited the following passage from Donne, addressing Sir H. Good-yere and speaking of his Hawk :—

'Which when herself she lessens in the aire,
You then first say that high enough she towres.'

Rosse. And Duncan's horses (a thing most strange and certain),

Beauteous and swift, the minions of their race,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,
Contending 'gainst obedience, as they would Make war with mankind.

Old M. 'Tis said, they ate each other.

Rosse. They did so; to the amazement of mine eyes,
That look'd upon't. Here comes the good Macduff:—

Enter MACDUFF.

How goes the world, sir, now?

Macd. Why, see you not?

Rosse. Is't known who did this more than bloody deed?

Macd. Those that Macbeth hath slain.

Rosse. Alas, the day!

What good could they pretend³?

Macd. They were suborn'd:

Malcolm, and Donalbain, the king's two sons,
Are stol'n away and fled; which puts upon them
Suspicion of the deed.

Rosse. 'Gainst nature still:

Thriftless ambition, that will ravin up
Thine own life's means!—Then 'tis most like,
The sovereignty will fall upon Macbeth⁴.

Macd. He is already nam'd; and gone to Scone.
To be invested.

Rosse. Where is Duncan's body?

Macd. Carried to Colme-kill⁵;

³ Pretend, i. e. intend. See note 14, p. 50.

⁵ Colme-kill is the famous Iona, one of the western isles mentioned by Holinshed as the burialplace of many ancient kings of Scotland. Colme-kill means the cell or chapel of St. Columba. See note 15, p. 12.

The sacred storehouse of his predecessors,
And guardian of their bones.

Rosse. Will you to Scone?

Macd. No, cousin, I'll to Fife.

Rosse. Well, I will thither.

Macd. Well, may you see things well done there;—
adieu!—

Lest our old robes sit easier than our new! Suspicious

Rosse. Farewell, father. of Macbeth's

Old M. God's benison go with you: and with those
That would make good of bad, and friends of foes! Shir

[Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. Fores. A Room in the Palace.

Enter BANQUO.

Banquo.

BHOU hast it now, King, Cawdor, Glamis, all,
As th' weird women promis'd; and, I fear,
Thou play'dst most foully for't; yet it was said,

It should not stand in thy posterity;
But that myself should be the root and father
Of many kings. If there come truth from them
(As upon thee, Macbeth, their speeches shine),
Why, by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well,
And set me up in hope? But, hush; no more.

Senet sounded. Enter MACBETH, as King: LADY MACBETH, as Queen; LENOX, ROSSE, Lords, Ladies, and Attendants.

Macb. Here's our chief guest.

Lady M. If he had been forgotten,

It had been as a gap in our great feast,
And all-thing^a unbecoming.

Macb. To-night we hold a solemn supper¹, sir,
And I'll request your presence.

Ban. Let² your highness'
Command upon me; to the which, my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tie
For ever knit.

Macb. Ride you this afternoon?

Ban. Ay, my good lord.

Macb. We should have else desir'd your good advice
(Which still hath been both grave and prosperous),
In this day's council; but we'll take to-morrow.
Is't far you ride?

Ban. As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twi'xt this and supper: go not my horse the better³.
I must become a borrower of the night,
For a dark hour, or twain.

Macb. Fail not our feast.

Ban. My lord, I will not.

Macb. We hear, our bloody cousins are bestow'd
In England, and in Ireland; not confessing
Their cruel parricide, filling their hearers
With strange invention: But of that to-morrow:
When, therewithal, we shall have cause of state,
Craving us jointly. Hie you to horse: Adieu,
Till you return at night. Goes Fleance with you?

^a All-thing, i. e. every way.

¹ A solemn supper. This was the phrase of Shakespeare's time for a feast or banquet given on a particular occasion, to solemnize any event, as a birth, marriage, coronation, &c. Howel, in a letter to Sir T. Hawke, 1636, says, "I was invited yesternight to a solemne supper by B. J. [Ben Jonson], where you were deeply remembered."

² Thus the old copy. Rowe has Lay, which was suggested by Davenant's alteration of the play. Monk Mason proposed to read Set.

³ i. e. if my horse does not go well. Shakespeare often uses the comparative for the positive and superlative.

Ban. Ay my good lord: our time does call upon us⁴.

Macb. I wish your horses swift, and sure of foot;
And so I do commend you to their backs.

Farewell.—

[Exit BANQUO.]

Let every man be master of his time
Till seven at night; to make society
The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourself
Till supper-time alone: while then, God be with you.

[Exeunt LADY MACBETH, Lords, Ladies, &c.
Sirrah, a word with you: attend those men
Our pleasure?

Atten. They are, my lord, without the palace gate.

Macb. Bring them before us.— [Exit Atten.

To be thus is nothing;

But to be safely thus:—Our fears in Banquo
Stick deep; and in his royalty⁵ of nature Reigns that, which would be fear'd: 'Tis much he dares;

And, to that⁶ dauntless temper of his mind,
He hath a wisdom that doth guide his valour
To act in safety. There is none, but he Whose being I do fear: and, under him,
My genius is rebuk'd; as, it is said,
Mark Antony's was by Cæsar. He chid the sisters,
When first they put the name of King upon me,
And bade them speak to him; then, prophet-like,
They hail'd him father to a line of kings:
Upon my head they plac'd a fruitless crown,
And put a barren sceptre in my gripe,
Thence to be wrench'd with an unlineal hand,
No son of mine succeeding. If't be so,
For Banquo's issue have I fil'd⁷ my mind;

⁴ The folio has upon's, probably to avoid the trisyllabic ending and redundant syllable.

⁵ Royalty, i. e. nobleness.

⁶ And to that, i. e. in addition to.

⁷ Fil'd is often used for defiled.

For them the gracious Duncan have I murder'd ;
 Put rancours in the vessel of my peace
 Only for them ; and mine eternal jewel
 Given to the common enemy of man⁸,
 To make them kings ; the seed⁹ of Banquo kings !
 Rather than so, come fate into the list,
 And champion me to the utterance¹⁰!—Who's there?—

Re-enter Attendant, with two Murderers.

Now go to the door, and stay there till we call.

[Exit Attendant.

Was it not yesterday we spoke together ?

1 Mur. It was, so please your highness.

Macb. Well then,

Now have you consider'd of my speeches ?

Know that 'twas he, in the times past,

Which held you so under fortune ;

Which you thought had been our innocent self.

This I made good to you in our last conference,
 Pass'd in probation with you :

How you were borne in hand¹¹; how cross'd ;

The instruments ; who wrought with them :

And all things else, that might to half a soul

And to a notion craz'd, say, Thus did Banquo.

1 Mur. You made it known to us.

⁸ The common enemy of man. Shakespeare repeats the phrase in Twelfth Night, Act iii. Sc. 4:—"Defy the devil: consider, he's an enemy to mankind." The phrase was common among his contemporaries; the word fiend, Johnson remarks, signifies enemy.

⁹ The old copies have seeds.

¹⁰ To the utterance. This phrase, which is found in writers who preceded Shakespeare, is borrowed from the French; se battre à l'outrance, to fight desperately or to extremity, even to death. The sense therefore is:—"Let fate, that has foredoomed the exaltation of Banquo's sons, enter the lists against me in defence of its own decrees, I will fight against it to the extremity, whatever be the consequence."

¹¹ To bear in hand is to delude by encouraging hope and holding out fair prospects, without any intention of performance.

Macb. I did so ; and went further, which is now
Our point of second meeting. Do you find
Your patience so predominant in your nature,
That you can let this go ? Are you so gossell'd
To pray for this good man, and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd yours for ever ?

1 Mur. We are men, my liege.

Macb. Ay, in the catalogue ye go for men ;
As hounds, and greyhounds, mongrels, spaniels, curs.
Shoughs¹², water-rugs, and demi-wolves, are cleped
All by the name of dogs : the valued file¹³
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,
The house-keeper, the hunter, every one
According to the gift which bounteous nature
Hath in him clos'd ; whereby he does receive Particular addition, from the bill
That writes them all alike : and so of men.
Now, if you have a station in the file,
Not in the worst rank of manhood, say it ;
And I will put that business in your bosoms,
Whose execution takes your enemy off ;
Grapples you to the heart and love of us,
Who wear our health but sickly in his life,
Which in his death were perfect.

2 Mur. I am one, my liege,
Whom the vile blows and buffets of the world
Have so incens'd, that I am reckless what I do, to spite the world.

1 Mur. And I another,
So weary with disasters, tugg'd with fortune,

¹² Shoughs are probably what we now call shocks. Nashe, in his Lenten Stufe, mentions them ; " a trundle-tail tike or shough or two." Cleped is called.

¹³ The valued file is the descriptive list wherein their value and peculiar qualities are set down ; such a list of dogs may be found in Junius's Nomenclator, by Fleming.

That I would set my life on any chance,
To mend it, or be rid on't.

Macb. Both of you

Know, Banquo was your enemy.

2 Mur. True, my lord.

Macb. ~~So is he~~ mine: and in such bloody distance,
That every minute of his being thrusts
Against my near'st of life: And though I could
With bare-fac'd power sweep him from my sight,
And bid my will avouch it; yet I must not,
For certain friends that are both his and mine,
Whose loves I may not drop, but wail his fall
Whom I myself struck down: and thence it is,
That I to your assistance do make love;
Masking the business from the common eye,
For sundry weighty reasons.

2 Mur. We shall, my lord,
Perform what you command us.

1 Mur. Though our lives——

Macb. Your spirits shine through you. Within this hour at most,

I will advise you where to plant yourselves:
Acquaint you with the perfect spy o' th' time¹⁴,
The moment on't: for't must be done to-night,
And something from the palace; always thought,
That I require a clearness¹⁵: And with him
(To leave no rubs, nor botches, in the work,)
Fleance his son, that keeps him company,
Whose absence is no less material to me
Than is his father's, must embrace the fate
Of that dark hour. Resolve yourselves apart;
I'll come to you anon.

2 Mur. We are resolv'd, my lord.

¹⁴ i. e. the exact time when you may look out or lie in wait for him.

¹⁵ Always thought,

That I require a clearness.

i. e. "Always remembering that I must stand clear of suspicion."

Macb. I'll call upon you straight; abide within.
It is concluded:—Banquo, thy soul's flight,
If it find heaven, must find it out to-night. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. Another Room.

Enter LADY MACBETH, and a Servant.

Lady M. Is Banquo gone from court?

Serv. Ay, madam, but returns again to-night.

Lady M. Say to the king, I would attend his leisure
For a few words.

Serv. Madam, I will.

[Exit.]

Lady M. Nought's had, all's spent,
Where our desire is got without content:
'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than, by destruction, dwell in doubtful joy.

Enter MACBETH.

How now, my lord? why do you keep alone,
Of sorriest¹ fancies your companions making?
Using those thoughts, which should indeed have died
With them they think on? Things without all remedy,
Should be without regard: what's done, is done.

Macb. We have scotch'd the snake, not kill'd it;
She'll close, and be herself; whilst our poor malice
Remains in danger of her former tooth.
But let the frame of things disjoint, both the worlds suffer,

Ere we will eat our meal in fear, and sleep
In the affliction of these terrible dreams
That shake us nightly: Better be with the dead,
Whom we, to gain our place², have sent to peace,

² The first folio reads peace; the second folio, place; and there can be no doubt that the last was the word the poet intended. He would hardly have written "to gain our peace." Macbeth gained his place by the murder of Duncan, but certainly did not obtain peace, in any sense of the word.

Than on the torture of the mind to lie
 In restless ecstasy³. Duncan is in his grave ;
 After life's fitful fever, he sleeps well ;
 Treason has done his worst : nor steel, nor poison,
 Malice domestick, foreign levy, nothing,
 Can touch him further !

Lady M. Come on ; gentle my lord,
 Sleek o'er your rugged looks ; be bright and jovial
 Among your guests to-night.

Macb. So shall I, love ; and so, I pray, be you :
 Let your remembrance apply to Banquo :
 Present him eminence⁴, both with eye and tongue :
 Unsafe the while, that we Must lave our honours in these flattering streams ;
 And make our faces vizards to our hearts,
 Disguising what they are⁵.

Lady M. You must leave this.

Macb. O, full of scorpions is my mind, dear wife !
 Thou know'st, that Banquo, and his Fleance, lives.

Lady M. But in them nature's copy's not eterne⁶.

Macb. There's comfort yet ; they are assailable ;
 Then be thou jocund : Ere the bat hath flown
 His cloister'd flight ; ere, to black Hecate's summons,
 The shard-borne beetle⁷, with his drowsy hums,

³ Ecstasy in its general sense signifies any violent emotion or alienation of the mind. The old dictionaries render it a trance, a dampe, a crampe. Vide note on the Tempest, Act iii. Sc. 3.

⁴ Present him eminence, i. e. do him the highest honour.

⁶ Ritson has observed that “ Nature's copy” alludes to copyhold tenure ; in which the tenant holds an estate for life, having nothing but the copy of the rolls of his lord's court to show for it. A life-hold tenure may well be said to be not eternal. The subsequent speech of Macbeth, in which he says,— confirms this explanation. Many of Shakespeare's allusions are to legal customs.

“ Cancel and tear to pieces that great bond,”

⁷ That is, the beetle borne along the air by its shards or scaly wings.

Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note.

Lady M.

What's to be done?

Macb. Beinnocent of the knowledge, dearest chuck,
Till thou applaud the deed. Come, seeling⁸ night,
Skarf up the tender eye of pitiful day;
And, with thy bloody and invisible hand,
Cancel, and tear to pieces, that great bond
Which keeps me pale⁹!—Light thickens; and the crow
Makes wing to the rooky wood¹⁰:
Good things of day begin to droop and drowse;
Whiles night's black agents to their preys do rouse¹¹.

Steevens had the merit of first showing that shard or sherd was the ancient word for a scale or outward covering, a case or sheath: as appears from the following passage cited by him, from Gower's Confessio Amantis, b. vi. fol. 138:—

“She sigh, her thought a dragon tho,
Whose sherdes shynen as the sonne.”

And again in book v. speaking of a serpent:—

“He was so sherded all about,
It held all edge tool without.”

In Cymbeline Shakespeare applies this epithet again to the beetle:—

“We find
The sharded beetle in a safer hold
Than is the full-winged eagle.”

⁸ i. e. blinding; to seel up the eyes of a hawk was to close them by sewing the eyelids together.

⁹ So in Cymbeline:—

“Cancel his bond of life, dear God, I pray.”

¹⁰ Thus in Fletcher's Faithful Shepherdess:—

“Fold your flocks up, for the air
'Gins to thicken, and the sun
Already his great course hath run.”

Spenser in the Shepherd's Calendar has:—

“The welkin thicks apace.”

The poet has shown himself a close observer of nature in marking the return of the rooks to their nest trees when the day is yawning to a close. Virgil has a very natural description of the same circumstance:—

“E pastu decedens agmine magno

Thou marvell'st at my words ; but hold thee still ;
 Things, bad begun, make strong themselves by ill :
 So, pr'ythee, go with me. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same.

A Park or Lawn, with a Gate leading to the Palace.

Enter three Murderers.

1 Mur. But who did bid thee join with us ?

3 Mur. Macbeth.

2 Mur. He needs not our mistrust ; since he delivers
 Our offices, and what we have to do,
 To the direction just.

1 Mur. Then stand with us.
 The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day :
 Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
 To gain the timely inn ; and near approaches
 The subject of our watch.

3 Mur. Hark ! I hear horses.

Ban. [Within.] Give us a light there, ho !

2 Mur. Then 'tis he ; the rest
 That are within the note of expectation,
 Already are i' the court.

1 Mur. His horses go about.

3 Mur. Almost a mile : but he does usually,
 So all men do, from hence to the palace gate
 Make it their walk.

Enter BANQUO and FLEANCE, with a Torch.

2 Mur. A light, a light !

3 Mur. 'Tis he.

1 Mur. Stand to't.

Ban. It will be rain to-night.

1 Mur.

Let it come down.

[Assaults BANQUO.

Ban. O, treachery! Fly, good Fleance, fly, fly, fly!
Thou may'st revenge. O slave!

[Dies. Fleance escapes^a.

3 Mur. Who did strike out the light?

1 Mur.

Was't not the way?

3 Mur. There's but one down: the son is fled.

2 Mur. We have lost best half of our affair.

1 Mur. Well, let's away, and say how much is done.

SCENE IV. A Room of State in the Palace.

A Banquet prepared.

Enter MACBETH, LADY MACBETH, ROSSE, LENOX, Lords, and Attendants.

Macb. You know your own degrees, sit down: at first¹

And last, the hearty welcome.

Lords.

Thanks to your majesty.

Macb. Ourselves will mingle with society,

And play the humble host.

Our hostess keeps her state²; but, in best time,

We will require her welcome.

Lady M. Pronounce it for me, sir, to all our friends;
For my heart speaks, they are welcome.

^a Fleance, after the assassination of his father, fled into Wales, where, by the daughter of the prince of that country, he had a son named Walter, who afterwards became Lord High Steward of Scotland, and from thence assumed the name of Sir Walter Steward. From him, in a direct line, King James I. was descended; in compliment to whom Shakespeare has chosen to describe Banquo, who was equally concerned with Macbeth in the murder of Duncan, as innocent of that crime.

¹ At first and last. Johnson with great plausibility proposes to read "To first and last."

² Keeps her state, i. e. continues in her chair of state. A state was a royal chair with a canopy over it.

Enter first Murderer, to the door.

Macb. See, they encounter thee with their hearts'
thanks :—

Both sides are even : Here I'll sit i' the midst :
Be large in mirth ; anon, we'll drink a measure
The table round.—There's blood upon thy face.

Mur. 'Tis Banquo's then.

Macb. 'Tis better thee without, than he within³.
Is he despatch'd ?

Mur. My lord, his throat is cut ; that I did for him.

Macb. Thou art the best o' the cut-throats : Yet he's good
That did the like for Fleance : if thou didst it,
Thou art the nonpareil.

Mur. Most royal sir,
Fleance is 'scap'd.

Macb. Then comes my fit again : I had else been perfect ;
Whole as the marble, founded as the rock ;
As broad, and general, as the casing air :
But now, I am cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in
To saucy doubts and fears. But Banquo's safe ?

Mur. Ay, my good lord : safe in a ditch he bides,
With twenty trenched⁴ gashes on his head ;
The least a death to nature.

Macb. Thanks for that :—
There the grown serpent lies ; the worm, that's fled,
Hath nature that in time will venom breed,

³ Mr. Hunter is of opinion that this and much of what follows Macbeth does not address to the murderer, much less speak to him, revealing the secret purpose and thoughts of his mind, and that they are aside speeches. This seems only applicable to a portion of this speech.

⁴ With twenty trenched gashes on his head. From the French trancher, to cut. So in Arden of Feversham :—

“Is deeply trenched on my blushing brow.”

No teeth for the present.—Get thee gone ; to-morrow
We'll hear ourselves again. [Exit Murderer.]

Lady M. My royal lord,
You do not give the cheer : the feast is sold,
That is not often vouch'd while 'tis a making ;
'Tis given with welcome : To feed were best at home ;
From thence, the sauce to meat is ceremony ;
Meeting were bare without it.

Macb. Sweet remembrancer !—
Now, good digestion wait on appetite,
And health on both !

Len. May it please your highness sit ?

Enter the Ghost of BANQUO, and sits in MACBETH'S place.

Macb. Here had we now our country's honour roof'd,
Were the grac'd person of our Banquo present ;
Who may I rather challenge for unkindness,
Than pity for mischance⁵!

Rosse. His absence, sir,
Lays blame upon his promise. Please it your highness,
To grace us with your royal company ?

Macb. The table's full.

Len. Here's a place reserv'd, sir.

Macb. Where ?

Len. Here, my good lord. What is't that moves your highness ?

Macb. Which of you have done this ?

Lords. What, my good lord ?

Macb. Thou canst not say, I did it : never shake

⁵ Macbeth betrays himself by an overacted regard for Banquo, of whose absence from the feast he affects to complain, that he may not be suspected of knowing the cause, though at the same time he very unguardedly drops an allusion to that cause. May I seems to imply here a wish, not an assertion. It is during the subsequent speech of Rosse that the ghost first becomes visible to Macbeth.

Thy gory locks at me.

Rosse. Gentlemen, rise ; his highness is not well.

Lady M. Sit, worthy friends :—my lord is often thus,
And hath been from his youth : 'pray you, keep seat ;
The fit is momentary ; upon a thought⁶

He will again be well : If much you note him,
You shall offend him, and extend his passion⁷ ;
Feed, and regard him not.—Are you a man ?

Macb. Ay, and a bold one, that dare look on that
Which might appal the devil.

Lady M. O proper stuff !
This is the very painting of your fear :
This is the air-drawn dagger, which, you said,
Led you to Duncan. O, these flaws⁸, and starts, (Impostors to⁹ true fear), would well become
A woman's story at a winter's fire,
Authoriz'd by her grandam. Shame itself !
Why do you make such faces ? When all's done,
You look but on a stool.

Macb. Pr'ythee, see there ! behold ! look ! lo ! how say you ?——

Why, what care I ? If thou canst nod, speak too.—

⁶ i. e. as speedily as thought can be exerted. So in King Henry IV. Part I. "and with a thought, seven of the eleven I paid."

⁷ i. e. prolong his suffering, make his fit longer.

⁸ Flaws are sudden gusts.

⁹ Impostors to true fear. It seems strange that none of the commentators should be aware that this was a form of elliptic expression, commonly used even at this day in the phrase, "this is nothing to them," i. e. in comparison to them. We have it again in Romeo and Juliet :—"My will to her consent is but a part," i. e. is but a part in comparison to her consent. Antony Huish, in his Pricianus Ephebus, 1668, says :—"The English do eclipse many words which the Latines would to be expressed, e. g. —There is no enemy—to him we foster in our bosom, i. e. like to or compared to." Thus in the Two Gentlemen of Verona, p. 127 :—"There is no woe to his correction." So in Fyne's Moryson's Itinerary, 1617, fol. part iii. page 5, "Thus the English proverb saith : 'No knave to the learned knave.'" Vide also P. Plouhman, Whitaker's edition, p. 367, l. 4.

If charnel-houses, and our graves, must send
 Those that we bury, back, our monuments
 Shall be the maws of kites¹⁰. [Ghost disappears.]

Lady M. What ! quite unmann'd in folly ?

Macb. If I stand here, I saw him.

Lady M. Fye, for shame !

Macb. Blood hath been shed ere now, i' the olden time,
 Ere human statute purg'd the gentle weal ;
 Ay, and since too, murders have been perform'd
 Too terrible for the ear : the times have been,
 That, when the brains were out, the man would die
 And there an end : but now, they rise again,
 With twenty mortal murders on their crowns,
 And push us from our stools : This is more strange
 Than such a murder is.

Lady M. My worthy lord,
 Your noble friends do lack you.

Macb. I do forget :—
 Do not muse¹¹ at me, my most worthy friends ;
 I have a strange infirmity, which is nothing
 To those that know me. Come, love and health to all ;
 Then I'll sit down :—Give me some wine, fill full :—
 I drink to the general joy of the whole table,

Enter Ghost.

And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss ;
 'Would he were here ! to all, and him, we thirst,
 And all to all¹².

Lords. Our duties, and the pledge.

¹⁰ The same thought occurs in Spenser's Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. viii.—“ Be not entombed in the raven or the kight.”

¹¹ Shakespeare uses to muse for to wonder, to be in amaze. So in King Henry IV. Part II. Act iv.—

“ I muse, you make so slight a question.”
 and in All's Well that Ends Well :—

“ And rather muse than ask why I entreat you.”

¹² That is, we desire to drink all good wishes to all.

Macb. Avaunt! and quit my sight! Let the earth hide thee!

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold;
Thou hast no speculation¹³ in those eyes
Which thou dost glare with!

Lady M. Think of this, good peers,
But as a thing of custom: 'tis no other;
Only it spoils the pleasure of the time.

Macb. What man dare, I dare:
Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or the Hyrcan tiger¹⁴,
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble: Or, be alive again,
And dare me to the desert with thy sword:
If trembling I inhabit¹⁵ then, protest me
The baby of a girl.—Hence, horrible shadow!
Unreal mockery, hence!—[Ghost disappears.] Why,
so;—being gone,
I am a man again.—'Pray you, sit still.

Lady M. You have displac'd the mirth, broke the good meeting,
With most admir'd disorder.

Macb. Can such things be,
And overcome¹⁶ us like a summer's cloud,

¹³ Thou hast no speculation in those eyes. Bullokar in his Expositor, 1616, explains "Speculation, the inward knowledge, or beholding of a thing." Thus in the 115th Psalm:—"Eyes have they, but see not."

¹⁴ Hyrcan for Hyrcanian was the mode of expression at that time.

¹⁵ Pope changed inhabit, the reading of the old copy, to inhibit. To inhibit is to forbid, a meaning which will not suit with the context of the passage. The original text is sufficiently plain. "Dare me to the desert with thy sword; if then I do not meet thee there; if trembling I then stay in my castle, or any habitation; if I hide my head, or dwell in any place through fear, protest me the baby of a girl."

¹⁶ Overcome us, i. e. pass over us without wonder, as a casual summer's cloud passes, unregarded.

Without our special wonder? You make me strange
 Even to the disposition that I owe¹⁷,
 When now I think, you can behold such sights,
 And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks,
 When mine are blanch'd with fear.

Rosse. What sights, my lord?

Lady M. I pray you, speak not; he grows worse and worse;

Question enrages him: at once, good night:—
 Stand not upon the order of your going,
 But go at once.

Len. Good night, and better health
 Attend his majesty!

Lady M. A kind good night to all!
 [Exeunt Lords and Attendants.]

Macb. It will have blood; they say, blood will have blood;

Stones have been known to move, and trees to speak;
 Augures¹⁸, and understood relations, have,
 By magot-pies, and choughs, and rooks, brought forth
 The secret'st man of blood.—What is the night?

Lady M. Almost at odds with morning, which is which.

Macb. How say'st thou¹⁹, that Macduff denies his person,

¹⁷ Owe, i. e. possess. "You strike me with amazement, make me scarce know myself, now when I think that you can behold such sights unmoved, &c."

¹⁹ i. e. what say'st thou to this circumstance? Thus in Macbeth's address to his wife on the first appearance of Banquo's ghost:—
 "Behold! look! lo! how say you?"

At our great bidding?

Lady M. Did you send to him, sir?

Macb. I hear it by the way; but I will send:

There's not a one of them, but in his house
I keep a servant fee'd. I will to-morrow
(And betimes I will,) to the weird sisters:
More shall they speak; for now I am bent to know,
By the worst means, the worst: for mine own good
All causes shall give way: I am in blood
Stept in so far, that, should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go o'er:
Strange things I have in head, that will to hand;
Which must be acted, ere they may be scann'd.

Lady M. You lack the season²⁰ of all natures, sleep.

Macb. Come, we'll to sleep: My strange and self-abuse

Is the initiate fear, that wants hard use:—

We are yet but young in deed²¹. [Exeunt.

So again in Othello, when the Duke is informed that the Turkish fleet was making for Rhodes, which he supposed to have been bound for Cyprus, he says:—

“How say you by this change?”

Again in the Two Gentlemen of Verona, Speed says, “But Launce, how say'st thou, that my master is become a notable lover?”

²⁰ You lack the season of all natures, sleep. Johnson explains this, “You want sleep, which seasons or gives the relish to all natures.” Indiget somni vitæ condimenti. So in All's Well that Ends Well:—

“'Tis the best brine a maiden can season her praise in.”

See note on Hamlet, Act i. Sc. 3.

²¹ The editions previous to Theobald's read:—

“We're but young indeed.”

The initiate fear is “the fear that always attends the first initiation into guilt, before the mind becomes callous and insensible by hard use or frequent repetition of it.”

SCENE V. The Heath. Thunder.

Enter HECATE¹, meeting the three Witches.

1 Witch. Why, how now, Hecate? you look angrily.

Hec. Have I not reason, beldams, as you are,
 Saucy, and overbold? How did you dare
 To trade and traffick with Macbeth,
 In riddles, and affairs of death;
 And I, the mistress of your charms,
 The close contriver of all harms,
 Was never call'd to bear my part,
 Or show the glory of our art?
 And, which is worse, all you have done
 Hath been but for a wayward son,
 Spiteful, and wrathful; who, as others do,
 Loves for his own ends, not for you.
 But make amends now: Get you gone,

Shakespeare has been unjustly censured for introducing Hecate among the vulgar witches, and consequently for confounding ancient with modern superstitions. But the poet has elsewhere shown himself well acquainted with the classical connexion which this deity had with witchcraft. Reginald Scot, in his Discovery, mentions it as the common opinion of all writers, that witches were supposed to have nightly "meetings with Herodias and the Pagan gods," and that "in the night time they ride abroad with Diana, the goddess of the Pagans," &c. Their dame or chief leader seems always to have been an old Pagan, as "the Ladie Sibylla, Minerva, or Diana." In Middleton's Witch, Hecate is the name of one of his witches, and she has a son a low buffoon. In Jonson's Sad Sheperd, Act ii. Sc. 3, Maudlin the witch calls Hecate the mistress of witches, "Our dame Hecate." Shakespeare no doubt knew that Diana was the name by which the goddess was invoked in modern times, but has preferred her former appellation. Our great poet is not alone in the pronunciation of Hecate as a dissyllable. Marlowe, who was a scholar, has also thus used it in his Dr. Faustus:—

"Pluto's blew fire and Hecat's tree
 With magick spells encompass thee."

Jonson also, in the passage above cited, and even Milton, in his Comus, have taken the same liberty:—

"Stay thy cloudy ebon chair
 Wherein thou rid'st with Hecat, and befriend us," &c.

And at the pit of Acheron
 Meet me i' the morning ; thither he
 Will come to know his destiny.
 Your vessels, and your spells, provide,
 Your charms, and every thing beside ;
 I am for the air ; this night I'll spend
 Unto a dismal and a fatal end.
 Great business must be wrought ere noon.
 Upon the corner of the moon
 There hangs a vaporous drop profound² ;
 I'll catch it ere it come to ground ;
 And that, distill'd by magick slights³,
 Shall raise such artificial sprights,
 As, by the strength of their illusion,
 Shall draw him on to his confusion :
 He shall spurn fate, scorn death, and bear
 His hopes 'bove wisdom, grace, and fear :
 And you all know, security
 Is mortal's chiefest enemy.

SONG. [Within.] *Come away, come away, &c.*⁴

² Steevens remarks that Shakespeare's mythological knowledge on this occasion appears to have deserted him ; for as Hecate is only one of three names belonging to the same goddess, she could not properly be employed in one character to catch a drop that fell from her in another. In a Midsummer Night's Dream, however, the poet was sufficiently aware of her threefold capacity :—

“Fairies, that do run

By the triple Hecat's team.”

The vaporous drop profound seems to have been meant for the same as the virus lunare of the ancients, being a foam which the moon was supposed to shed on particular herbs, or other objects, when strongly solicited by enchantment. Lucan introduces Erictho using it, lib. vi.—“Et virus large lunare ministrat.”

³ Slights are arts, subtle practices.

⁴ This song is to be found in The Witch, by Middleton : for the convenience of the reader it is subjoined :—

“Come away, come away,	}	In the air.
Hecate, Hecate, come away,
Hec. I come, I come, I come,
With all the speed I may,
With all the speed I may.”

Hark, I am call'd ; my little spirit, see,
Sits in a foggy cloud, and stays for me. [Exit.

1 Witch. Come, let's make haste ; she'll soon be back again. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI. Fores. A Room in the Palace.

Enter LENOX and another Lord.

Len. My former speeches have but hit your thoughts,
Which can interpret farther : only, I say,
Things have been strangely borne : The gracious
Duncan

Was pitied of Macbeth :—marry, he was dead :—
And the right-valiant Banquo walk'd too late ;
Whom, you may say, if't please you, Fleance kill'd,
For Fleance fled. Men must not walk too late.
Who cannot¹ want the thought, how monstrous
It was for Malcolm, and for Donalbain,
To kill their gracious father ? damned fact !
How it did grieve Macbeth ! did he not straight,
In pious rage, the two delinquents tear,
That were the slaves of drink, and thralls of sleep ?
Was not that nobly done ? Ay, and wisely too ;
For 'twould have anger'd any heart alive,
To hear the men deny it. So that, I say,
He has borne all things well : and I do think,
That, had he Duncan's sons under his key,
(As, an't please heaven, he shall not), they should find
What 'twere to kill a father ; so should Fleance.
But, peace ! for from broad words, and 'cause he fail'd
His presence at the tyrant's feast, I hear,
Macduff lives in disgrace : Sir, can you tell
Where he bestows himself ?

¹ Who cannot want the thought, &c. The sense requires "who can want the thought ;" but it is, probably, a lapse of the poet's pen.

Lord. The son^a of Duncan,
 From whom this tyrant holds the due of birth,
 Lives in the English court; and is receiv'd
 Of the most pious Edward with such grace,
 That the malevolence of fortune nothing
 Takes from his high respect: Thither Macduff
 Is gone to pray the holy king, upon his aid
 To wake Northumberland, and warlike Siward:
 That, by the help of these, (with Him above
 To ratify the work,) we may again
 Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights;
 Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives²;
 Do faithful homage, and receive free honours³;—
 All which we pine for now: And this report
 Hath so exasperate⁴ the king, that he Prepares for some attempt of war.

Len. Sent he to Macduff!

Lord. He did: and with an absolute, Sir, not I,
 The cloudy messenger turns me his back,
 And hums, as who should say, You'll rue the time
That clogs me with this answer.

Len. And that well might Advise him to a caution, to hold what distance
 His wisdom can provide. Some holy angel
 Fly to the court of England, and unfold
 His message ere he come; that a swift blessing
 May soon return to this our suffering country
 Under a hand accurs'd!

Lord. I'll send my prayers with him!

[Exeunt.]

^a The folio misprints sonnes'.

² Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives. The construction is, free our feasts and banquets from bloody knives.

³ I have shown in a note on Twelfth Night, Act ii. Sc. 4, p. 322, that free meant pure, chaste, consequently unspotted, which may be its meaning here. Free also meant liberal, noble. See note on the Second Part of King Henry VI. Act iii. Sc. 1.

⁴ Exasperate for exasperated. The old copies have their king

ACT IV.

SCENE I. A dark Cave. In the middle, a Cauldron boiling.

*Thunder. Enter the three Witches*¹.

1 Witch.

THRICE the brinded cat hath mew'd.

2 Witch. Thrice; and once the hedge-pig whin'd².

3 Witch. Harper cries³:—'Tis time, 'tis time.

1 Witch. Round about the cauldron go;

In the poison'd entrails throw.

Toad, that under cold stone³,

Days and nights has thirty-one

Swelter'd⁴ venom, sleeping got,

² Thrice; and once the hedge-pig whin'd. The urchin or hedgehog, like the toad, for its solitariness, the ugliness of its appearance, and from a popular belief that it sucked or poisoned the udders of cows, was adopted into the demonologic system; and its shape was sometimes supposed to be assumed by mischievous elves. Hence it was one of the plagues of Caliban in The Tempest.

³ In the old copy it is Harpier, most probably intended for Harpie. But in Marlowe's Tamburlane we have—

"And like a harper tires upon my life."

³ Pope printed, "the cold stone;" Steevens, "coldest stone." I follow the old copy. See Boswell's Essay on Shakespeare's Versification. In the next line it is usual to print hast instead of has, which is the old reading; but the speaker is not addressing the toad, she is giving instructions for the charm.

⁴ Swelter'd. This word is employed to signify that the animal was moistened with its own cold exudations. In the Philosophical Transactions for 1826, Dr. Davy has shown that the toad is poisonous, the poison lying diffused over the body immediately under the skin.

Boil thou first i' the charmed pot!

All. Double, double, toil and trouble;
Fire burn; and cauldron bubble.

2 Witch. Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake:
Eye of newt, and toe of frog,
Wool of bat, and tongue of dog,
Adder's fork, and blind-worm's⁵ sting,
Lizard's leg, and owlet's wing,
For a charm of pow'ful trouble,
Like a hell-broth boil and bubble.

All. Double, double, toil and trouble;
Fire burn; and cauldron bubble.

3 Witch. Scale of dragon, tooth of wolf;
Witches mummy; maw and gulf⁶
Of the ravin'd⁷ salt-sea shark;
Root of hemlock, digg'd i' the dark;
Liver of blaspheming Jew;
Gall of goat; and slips of yew
Sliver'd⁸ in the moon's eclipse;
Nose of Turk, and Tartar's lips;
Finger of birth-strangled babe,
Ditch-deliver'd by a drab,
Make the gruel thick and slab:
Add thereto a tiger's chauldron⁹,

⁵ The blind-worm is the slow-worm. Thus in Drayton's Noah's Flood:—

⁶ Gulf, i. e. the throat.

⁷ To ravin, according to Minsheu, is to devour, to eat greedily. Shakespeare probably used ravin'd for ravenous, the passive participle for the adjective. In Horman's Vulgaria, 1519, occurs “Thou art a ravenar of delycatis.”

⁸ Sliver is a common word in the north, where it means to cut a piece or slice. Again in King Lear:—

“She who herself will sliver and disbranch.”

⁹ i. e. entrails; a word formerly in common use in books of cookery, in one of which, printed in 1597, is a receipt to make a pudding of a calf's chaldron.

For the ingredients of our cauldron.

All. Double, double, toil and trouble;
Fire burn; and cauldron bubble.

2 Witch. Cool it with a baboon's blood,
Then the charm is firm and good.

Enter HECATE, and the other three Witches.

Hec. O, well done! I commend your pains;
And every one shall share i' the gains.
And now about the cauldron sing,
Like elves and fairies in a ring,
Enchanting all that you put in.

*Musick and a SONG. Black Spirits, &c.*¹⁰

2 Witch. By the pricking of my thumbs¹¹,
Something wicked this way comes:—
Open, locks, whoever knocks.

Enter MACBETH.

Macb. How now, you secret, black, and midnight hags?

What is't you do?

All. A deed without a name.

Macb. I conjure you, by that which you profess,

¹⁰ This song is found in The Witch, by Middleton, and is there called "A charme Song about a Vessel."

"Black spirits and white,
Red spirits and gray;
Mingle, mingle, mingle,
You that mingle may.

Titty Tiffin, keep it stiff in,
Firedrake, Puckey, make it lucky,
Liard, Robin, you must bobin,

Round, around, around, about, about,

All ill come running in, all good keep out."

¹¹ By the pricking of my thumbs. It is a very ancient superstition, that all sudden pains of the body, and other sensations which could not naturally be accounted for, were presages or somewhat that was shortly to happen.

(Howe'er you come to know it), answer me :
 Though you untie the winds, and let them fight
 Against the churches ; though the yesty¹² waves
 Confound and swallow navigation up ;
 Though bladed¹³ corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down ;
 Though castles topple on their warders' heads ;
 Though palaces and pyramids do slope
 Their heads to their foundations ; though the treasure
 Of nature's germins¹⁴ tumble all together,
 Even till destruction sicken ; answer me
 To what I ask you.

1 Witch.

Speak.

2 Witch.

Demand.

3 Witch.

We'll answer

1 Witch. Say, if thou'dst rather hear it from our mouths,

Or from our masters' ?

Macb.

Call 'em, let me see 'em.

1 Witch. Pour in sow's blood, that hath eaten
 Her nine farrow¹⁵ ; grease, that's sweaten
 From the murderer's gibbet, throw
 Into the flame.

All.

Come, high or low ;

Thyself, and office, deftly¹⁶ show.

¹² Yesty is nere from the A. S. yrctig, Ierctig, procellosus, stormy, which much better accords with the poet's high charged description. Yest is from the same A. S. verb.

¹³ Bladed corn is corn just come into ear, when it is very liable to be lodged by winds and storms. See The Text of Shakespeare Vindicated, p. 255.

¹⁴ Germins, i. e. seeds which have begun to sprout or germinate.

¹⁵ *Pour in sow's blood, that hath eaten
 Her nine farrow.*

Shakespeare probably caught this idea from the laws of Kenneth II. King of Scotland :—" If a sow eate hir pigges, let hyr be stoned to death and buried, that no man eate of hyr flesh."—Holinshed's History of Scotland, ed. 1577, p. 181.

¹⁶ Deftly is adroitly, dexterously.

Thunder. 1 Apparition, of an armed Head¹⁷.

Macb. Tell me, thou unknown power,—

1 Witch. He knows thy thought ;

Hear his speech, but say thou nought¹⁸.

App. Macbeth ! Macbeth ! Macbeth ! beware
Macduff ;

Beware the thane of Fife.—Dismiss me :—Enough¹⁹.
[Descends.

Macb. Whate'er thou art, for thy good caution,
thanks ;

Thou hast harp'd my fear aright : — But one word more :—

1 Witch. He will not be commanded : Here's another,

More potent than the first.

Thunder. 2 Apparition, of a bloody Child.

App. Macbeth ! Macbeth ! Macbeth !

Macb. Had I three ears, I'd hear thee²⁰.

App. Be bloody, bold, and resolute ; laugh to scorn

¹⁷ "The armed head represents symbolically Macbeth's head cut off and brought to Malcolm by Macduff. The bloody child is Macduff, untimely ripped from his mother's womb. The child, with a crown on his head and a bough in his hand, is the royal Malcolm, who ordered his soldiers to hew them down a bough, and bear it before them to Dunsinane."—Upton.

¹⁸ Silence was necessary during all incantations. So in Dr. Faustus :—

"Your grace demand no questions,
But in dumb silence let them come and go."

And in The Tempest :—

"Be mute, or else our spell is marr'd."

¹⁹ Spirits thus evoked were supposed to be impatient of being questioned. The spirit in the Second Part of King Henry the VIth, Act iv. Sc. 1, says :—

"Ask what thou wilt :—That I had said and done."

²⁰ Had I three ears, I'd hear thee. This singular expression probably means no more than, I will listen to thee with all attention.

The power of man, for none of woman born
 Shall harm Macbeth ²¹. [Descends.

Macb. Then live, Macduff; What need I fear of thee?

But yet I'll make assurance double sure,
 And take a bond of fate: thou shalt not live;
 That I may tell pale-hearted fear, it lies,
 And sleep in spite of thunder.—

Thunder. 3 Apparition, of a Child crowned, with a Tree in his Hand.

What is this,

That rises like the issue of a king;
 And wears upon his baby brow the round
 And top of sovereignty ²²?

All. Listen, but speak not to't.

App. Be lion-mettled, proud; and take no care
 Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are;
 Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until
 Great Birnam wood to high Dunsinane hill ²³

²¹ For none of woman born shall harm Macbeth. So Holinshed:—"And surely hereupon he had put Macduff to death, but that a certeine witch, whom he had in great trust, had told him, that he should never be slaine with man borne of anie woman, nor vanquished till the wood of Bernane came to the castle of Dunsinane. This prophecy put all fear out of his heart."

²² The round is that part of a crown which encircles the head: the top is the ornament which rises above it.

²³ The present accent of Dunsinane is right. In every subsequent instance the accent is misplaced. Thus in Hervey's Life of King Robert Bruce 1729, which Ritson thinks a good authority:—

"Whose deeds let Birnam and Dunsinnan tell,
 When Canmore battled and the villain fell."

Andrew of Wyntoun uses both accents.

Prophecies of apparent impossibilities were common in Scotland; such as the removal of one place to another, &c. Thus Sir D. Lindsay:—

"Quhen the Bas and the Isle of May
 Beis set upon the Mount Sinay,

Shall come against him. [Descends.

Macb. That will never be ;
 Who can impress the forest²⁴ ; bid the tree
 Unfix his earth-bound root ? sweet bodements ! good !
 Rebellion's head²⁵, rise never, till the wood
 Of Birnam rise, and our high-plac'd Macbeth
 Shall live the lease of nature, pay his breath
 To time, and mortal custom.—Yet my heart
 Throbs to know one thing ; Tell me, (if your art
 Can tell so much,) shall Banquo's issue ever Reign in this kingdom ?

All. Seek to know no more.

Macb. I will be satisfied : deny me this,
 And an eternal curse fall on you ! Let me know :—
 Why sinks that cauldron ? and what noise²⁶ is this ?
[Hautboys.

1 Witch. Show ! 2 Witch. Show ! 3 Witch. Show !

All. Show his eyes, and grieve his heart²⁷ ;
 Come like shadows, so depart.

A show of Eight Kings, and BANQUO last, with a Glass in his Hand.

Macb. Thou art too like the spirit of Banquo ;
 down !

Quhen the Lowmound beside Falkland
 Be liftit to Northumberland."

²⁴ i. e. command it to serve him like a soldier impressed.

²⁵ The old copy has Rebellious dead. Theobald changed dead to head ; but this was only a partial cure of the corruption : it is quite evident that we should read Rebellion's head, the conspirers mentioned by the apparition. "Let Rebellion never raise its head till the wood of Birnam rise, and Macbeth shall live the lease of nature." The personification adds much to the effect of the passage.

²⁶ Noise in our old poets is often literally synonymous for music. Vide a note on the Second Part of King Henry IV. Act ii. Sc. 4.

²⁷ Show his eyes, and grieve his heart. "And the man of thine,

Thy crown does sear mine eyeballs :—And thy hair,
 Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first :—
 A third is like the former :—Filthy hags !
 Why do you show me this ?—A fourth ?—Start, eyes !
 What ! will the line stretch out to the crack of doom²⁸ ?
 Another yet ?—A seventh ?—I'll see no more :—
 And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glass²⁹,
 Which shows me many more ; and some I see,
 That twofold balls and treble sceptres carry³⁰ :
 Horrible sight !—Now, I see, 'tis true ;
 For the blood-bolter'd³¹ Banquo smiles upon me, whom I shall not cut off from mine altar, shall be to consume thine eyes, and to grieve thine heart.—1 Samuel ii. 33.

²⁸ i. e. the dissolution of nature. Crack and crash were formerly synonymous.

²⁹ This method of juggling prophecy is referred to in Measure for Measure, Act ii. Sc. 8 :—

“ And like a prophet

Looks in a glass, and shows me future evils.”

In an extract from the Penal Laws against witches, it is said “ they do answer either by voice, or else set before their eyes in glasses, chrystal stones, &c. the pictures or images of the persons or things sought for.” Spenser has given a circumstantial account of the glass which Merlin made for King Ryence.—Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 2. A mirror of the same kind was presented to Cambuscan, in the Squire's Tale of Chaucer : and we are told that “ a certaine philosopher did the like to Pompey, the which shewed him in a glasse the order of his enemies march.”—Boisteau's Theatrum Mundi, translated by John Alday, b. l. no date.

³⁰ That twofold balls and treble sceptres carry. This was intended as a compliment to James the First : he first united the two islands and the three kingdoms under one head, whose house too was said to be descended from Banquo, who is therefore represented not only as innocent, but as a noble character ; whereas, according to history, he was confederate with Macbeth in the murder of Duncan.

³¹ “ In Warwickshire,” says Malone, “ when a horse, sheep, or other animal, perspires much, and any of the hair or wool, in consequence of such perspiration, or any redundant humour, becomes matted into tufts with grime and sweat, he is said to be boltered ; and whenever the blood issues out and coagulates, forming the locks into hard clotted bunches, the beast is said to be blood-boltered. When a boy has a broken head, so that his hair is

And points at them for his.—What! is this so?

1 Witch. Ay, sir, all this is so:—But why
Stands Macbeth thus amazedly?—

Come, sisters, cheer we up his sprights³²,

And show the best of our delights;

I'll charm the air to give a sound,

While you perform your antick round:

That this great king may kindly say,

Our duties did his welcome pay.

[Musick. The Witches dance, and vanish.

Macb. Where are they? Gone?—Let this pernicious hour

Stand aye accursed in the calendar!—

Come in, without there!

Enter LENOX.

Len. What's your grace's will?

Macb. Saw you the weird sisters?

Len. No, my lord.

Macb. Came they not by you?

Len. No, indeed, my lord.

Macb. Infected be the air whereon they ride;

And damn'd all those that trust them!—I did hear
The galloping of horse: Who was't came by?

Len. 'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word,
Macduff is fled to England.

Macb. Fled to England?

Len. Ay, my good lord.

Macb. Time, thou anticipat'st³³ my dread exploits:

matted together with blood, his head is said to be boltered [pronounced baltered.] It is therefore applicable to Banquo, who had "twenty trenced gashes on his head."

³² Sprights, i. e. spirits. It would seem that spirits was almost always pronounced sprights or sprites by Shakespeare's contemporaries.

³³ Anticipat'st, i. e. preventest them, by taking away the opportunity.

The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,
 Unless the deed go with it. From this moment,
 The very firstlings of my heart shall be
 The firstlings of my hand. And even now
 To crown my thoughts with acts, be it thought and done :

The castle of Macduff I will surprise ;
 Seize upon Fife ; give to the edge o' the sword
 His wife, his babes, and all unfortunate souls
 That trace him in his line. No boasting like a fool :
 This deed I'll do, before this purpose cool :
 But no more flights³⁴ !—Where are these gentlemen ?
 Come, bring me where they are. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. Fife. A Room in Macduff's Castle.

Enter LADY MACDUFF, her SON, and ROSSE.

L. Macd. What had he done, to make him fly the land ?

Rosse. You must have patience, madam.

L. Macd. He had none ;
 His flight was madness : When our actions do not,
 Our fears do make us traitors¹.

Rosse. You know not,
 Whether it was his wisdom or his fear.

L. Macd. Wisdom ! to leave his wife, to leave his babes,
 His mansion, and his titles, in a place
 From whence himself does fly ? He loves us not ;
 He wants the natural touch : for the poor wren,

³⁴ The old copies have sights. It has been altered to flights in Mr. Collier's second folio, and in that which I possess ; but some have doubted whether by sights Macbeth is not intended to refer to such as the Witches had shown him.

¹ Our fears do make us traitors, i. e. our flight is considered as evidence of our treason.

The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
 Her young ones in her nest, against the owl.
 All is the fear, and nothing is the love ;
 As little is the wisdom, where the flight
 So runs against all reason.

Rosse. My dearest coz,
 I pray you, school yourself: But, for your husband,
 He is noble, wise, judicious, and best knows
 The fits o' th' season². I dare not speak much further :
 But cruel are the times, when we are traitors,
 And do not know ourselves^a ; when we hold rumour
 From what we fear, yet know not what we fear³ ;
 But float upon a wild and violent sea,
 Each way, and move.—I take my leave of you :
 'Tshall not be long^b but I'll be here again :
 Things at the worst will cease, or else climb upward
 To what they were before.—My pretty cousin,
 Blessing upon you !

L. Macd. Father'd he is, and yet he's fatherless.

Rosse. I am so much a fool, should I stay longer,
 It would be my disgrace, and your discomfort :
 I take my leave at once. [Exit ROSSE.]

L. Macd. Sirrah⁴, your father's dead ;

² The fits o' the season would appear to be the violent disorders of the season, its convulsions: as we still say figuratively the temper of the times. So in Coriolanus:—

“ But that

The violent fit o' th' times craves it as physic.”

^a Hanmer reads, “ and do not know't ourselves,” and I incline to think he was right.

³ “ The times are cruel when we are led by our fears to believe every rumour of danger we hear, yet are not conscious to ourselves of any crime for which we should be disturbed with fears.” A passage like this occurs in King John:—

“ Possess'd with rumours, full of idle dreams,
 Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear.”

^b The old copy has, “ Shall not be long ;” the ellipsis 't, for it, having evidently been omitted by accident.

⁴ Sirrah was not in our author's time a term of reproach, but sometimes used by masters to servants, parents to children, &c.

And what will you do now? How will you live?

Son. As birds do, mother.

L. Macd. What, with worms and flies?

Son. With what I get, I mean; and so do they.

L. Macd. Poor bird! thou'dst never fear the net, nor lime,

The pit-fall, nor the gin.

Son. Why should I, mother? Poor birds they are not set for.

My father is not dead, for all your saying.

L. Macd. Yes, he is dead; how wilt thou do for a father?

Son. Nay, how will you do for a husband?

L. Macd. Why, I can buy me twenty at any market.

Son. Then you'll buy 'em to sell again.

L. Macd. Thou speak'st with all thy wit;

And yet i'faith, with wit enough for thee.

Son. Was my father a traitor, mother?

L. Macd. Ay, that he was.

Son. What is a traitor?

L. Macd. Why, one that swears and lies.

Son. And be all traitors, that do so?

L. Macd. Every one that does so, is a traitor, and must be hanged.

Son. And must they all be hanged, that swear and lie?

L. Macd. Every one.

Son. Who must hang them?

L. Macd. Why, the honest men.

Son. Then the liars and swearers are fools: for there are liars and swearers enough to beat the honest men, and hang up them.

L. Macd. Now, God help thee, poor monkey! But how wilt thou do for a father?

Son. If he were dead, you'd weep for him: if you would not, it were a good sign that I should quickly have a new father.

L. Macd. Poor prattler ! how thou talk'st.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Bless you, fair dame ! I am not to you known,
Though in your state of honour I am perfect⁵.
I doubt, some danger does approach you nearly :
If you will take a homely man's advice,
Be not found here ; hence, with your little ones.
To fright you thus, methinks, I am too savage ;
To do worse to you, were fell cruelty,
Which is too nigh your person. Heaven preserve you !
I dare abide no longer. [Exit Messenger.]

L. Macd. Whither should I fly ?
I have done no harm. But I remember now
I'm in this earthly world ; where, to do harm,
Is often laudable ; to do good, sometime
Accounted dangerous folly : Why then, alas !
Do I put up that womanly defence,
To say, I have done no harm ? ——
What are these faces ?

Enter Murderers.

Mur. Where is your husband ?

L. Macd. I hope, in no place so unsanctified,
Where such as thou may'st find him.

Mur. He's a traitor.

Son. Thou liest, thou shag-hair'd⁶ villain.

Mur. What, you egg ! [Stabbing him.]

⁵ i. e. I am perfectly acquainted with your rank.

⁶ The old copies have "shag-ear'd villain." Shag-hair'd is an abusive epithet frequent in our old plays. Hair being formerly spelt heare, the corruption would easily arise. In Lodge's Incar-nate Devils of this Age, 1596, 4to. p. 37, we have it thus : "shag-heard slave."

Young fry of treachery !

Son.

He has kill'd me, mother ;

Run away, I pray you.

[Dies.

[Exit LADY MACDUFF, crying murder, and pursued by the Murderers.

SCENE III. England. A Room in the King's Palace.

*Enter MALCOLM and MACDUFF*¹.

Mal. Let us seek out some desolate shade, and there
Weep our sad bosoms empty.

Macd.

Let us rather

Hold fast the mortal sword ; and, like good men,
Bestride our downfall'n birthdom² : Each new morn,
New widows howl ; new orphans cry ; new sorrows
Strike heaven on the face, that it resounds
As if it felt with Scotland, and yell'd out
Like syllable of dolour.

Mal.

What I believe, I'll wail ;

What know, believe ; and, what I can redress,

As I shall find the time to friend³, I will.

What you have spoke, it may be so, perchance.

This tyrant, whose sole name blisters our tongues,

Was once thought honest : you have lov'd him well ;

² Birthdom, for the place of our birth, our native land. Thus in the Second Part of King Henry IV. Morton says—

“ He doth bestride a bleeding land.”

The old copies have downfall.

³ The time to friend, i. e. befriend.

He hath not touch'd you yet. I am young ; but something

You may deserve⁴ of him through me ; and wisdom
To offer up a weak, poor, innocent lamb,
To appease an angry god.

Macd. I am not treacherous.

Mal.

But Macbeth is.

A good and virtuous nature may recoil,
In an imperial charge⁵. But I shall crave your pardon ;
That which you are, my thoughts cannot transpose :
Angels are bright still, though the brightest fell :
Though all things foul would wear the brows of grace,
Yet grace must still look so⁶.

Macd.

I have lost my hopes.

Mal. Perchance, even there, where I did find my doubts.

Why in that rawness left you wife and child,
(Those precious motives, those strong knots of love,)
Without leave taking ?—I pray you,
Let not my jealousies be your dishonours,
But mine own safeties : You may be rightly just,
Whatever I shall think.

Macd.

Bleed, bleed, poor country !

⁴ You may deserve of him through me. The old copy reads discerne. The emendation was made by Theobald. In the subsequent part of the line something is wanted to complete the sense. There is no verb to which wisdom can refer. Perhaps we should read :—

“ But something

You may deserve of him through me ; and wisdom
'Twere to offer,” &c.

⁵ *A good and virtuous nature may recoil
In an imperial charge.*

i. e. A good mind may recede from goodness in the execution of a royal commission.

⁶ Yet grace must still look so, i. e. must still look as it does. An expression of a similar nature occurs in Measure for Measure :—

“ Good alone

Is good ; without a name vileness is so.”

Great tyranny, lay thou thy basis sure,
For goodness dares not check thee!—wear thou thy wrongs;

The title is affeer'd⁷!—Fare thee well, lord:
I would not be the villain that thou think'st
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich East to boot.

Mal. Be not offended:
I speak not as in absolute fear of you.
I think our country sinks beneath the yoke;
It weeps, it bleeds; and each new day a gash
Is added to her wounds: I think, withal,
There would be hands uplifted in my right;
And here, from gracious England, have I offer
Of godly thousands: But, for all this,
When I shall tread upon the tyrant's head,
Or wear it on my sword, yet my poor country
Shall have more vices than it had before;
More suffer, and more sundry ways than ever,
By him that shall succeed.

Macd. What should he be?

Mal. It is myself I mean: in whom I know
All the particulars of vice so grafted,
That, when they shall be open'd, black Macbeth
Will seem as pure as snow; and the poor state
Esteem him as a lamb, being compar'd
With my confineless harms⁸.

Macd. Not in the legions

⁷ To affeer is a law term, signifying to assess or reduce to certainty. The meaning therefore may be, the title is confirmed. My interpretation of the passage is this: "Bleed, bleed, poor country! Great Tyranny, lay thou thy basis sure, for goodness dares not check thee! Wear thou the honours achieved by thy wrongs; the title to them is now confirmed."

⁸ Confineless harms, i. e. immeasurable evils. Thus in the Merry Wives of Windsor, Act ii. Sc. 2, we have—

"Thou unconfineable baseness."

Of horrid hell, can come a devil more damn'd
In evils, to top Macbeth.

Mal. I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful,
Sudden, malicious, smacking of every sin
That has a name : But there's no bottom, none,
In my voluptuousness : your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust ; and my desire
All continent impediments would o'erbear,
That did oppose my will : Better Macbeth,
Than such a one to reign.

Macd. Boundless intemperance
In nature is a tyranny ; it hath been
The untimely emptying of the happy throne,
And fall of many kings. But fear not yet
To take upon you what is yours : you may Enjoy⁹ your pleasures in a spacious plenty,
And yet seem cold, the time you may so hood-wink.
We have willing dames enough ; there cannot be
That vulture in you, to devour so many
As will to greatness dedicate themselves,
Finding it so inclin'd.

Mal. With this, there grows,
In my most ill-compos'd affection, such
A staunchless avarice, that, were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands ;
Desire his jewels, and this other's house :
And my more-having would be as a sauce
To make me hunger more ; that I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good, and loyal,
Destroying them for wealth.

Macd. This avarice
Sticks deeper ; grows with more pernicious root

⁹ The old copy has convey. The words were easily confounded in copying from old MS.

Than summer-seeming lust¹⁰; and it hath been
 The sword of our slain kings: Yet do not fear;
 Scotland hath foysons¹¹ to fill up your will,
 Of your mere own: All these are portable¹²,
 With other graces weigh'd.

Mal. But I have none: The king-becoming graces,
 As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
 Bounty, perséverance, mercy, lowliness,
 Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
 I have no relish of them; but abound
 In the division of each several crime,
 Acting it many ways. Nay, had I power, I should Pour the sweet milk of concord into hell,
 Uprouar the universal peace, confound
 All unity on earth.

Macd. O Scotland! Scotland!

Mal. If such a one be fit to govern, speak:
 I am as I have spoken.

Macd. Fit to govern!

No, not to live.—O nation miserable,
 With an untitled¹³ tyrant bloody-sceptred,
 When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again?
 Since that the truest issue of thy throne
 By his own interdiction stands accurs'd,
 And does blaspheme his breed?—Thy royal father
 Was a most sainted king; the queen, that bore thee,
 Oftener upon her knees than on her feet,

¹⁰ Summer-seeming lust, i. e. summer-resembling lust, blazing hot for a while, but then passing away. Avarice is not so transient, as it increases with age. In Donne's Poems Malone has pointed out its opposite—winter-seeming.

¹¹ Foysons, i. e. plenty.

¹² Portable answers exactly to a phrase now in use. Such failings may be borne with, or are bearable.

¹³ With an untitled tyrant. Thus in Chaucer's Manciple's Tale:—

“ Right so betwix a titleles tiraunt
 And an outlawe.”

Died every day she liv'd⁴. Fare thee well !
 These evils, thou repeat'st upon thyself,
 Have banish'd me from Scotland.—O, my breast,
 Thy hope ends here !

Mal. Macduff, this noble passion,
 Child of integrity, hath from my soul
 Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts
 To thy good truth and honour. Devilish Macbeth
 By many of these trains hath sought to win me
 Into his power ; and modest wisdom plucks me
 From over-credulous haste : But God above
 Deal between thee and me ! for even now
 I put myself to thy direction, and Unspeak mine own detraction : here abjure
 The taints and blames I laid upon myself,
 For strangers to my nature. I am yet
 Unknown to woman ; never was forsworn ;
 Scarcely have coveted what was mine own ;
 At no time broke my faith ; would not betray
 The devil to his fellow ; and delight
 No less in truth, than life : my first false speaking
 Was this upon myself : What I am truly,
 Is thine, and my poor country's, to command :
 Whither, indeed, before thy here-approach,
 Old Siward, with ten thousand warlike men,
 Already at a point^a, was setting forth :
 Now we'll together ; And the chance, of goodness,
 Be like our warranted quarrel ! Why are you silent ?

Macd. Such welcome and unwelcome things at once,
 'Tis hard to reconcile.

⁴ Died every day she lived. The expression is derived from the Sacred Writings :—" I protest by your rejoicing, which I have in Christ Jesus our Lord, I die daily."—1 Cor. xv. 31.

^a At a point, i. e. at a stay or stop, settled, determined. The Rev. Mr. Arrowsmith has fully exemplified this phrase in Notes and Queries, vol. 7, p. 521.

Enter a Doctor.

Mal. Well ; more anon.—Comes the king forth, I pray you ?

Doct. Ay, sir : there are a crew of wretched souls, That stay his cure : their malady convinces¹⁵ The great assay of art ; but, at his touch, Such sanctity hath heaven given his hand, They presently amend.

Mal. I thank you, doctor.

[Exit Doctor.]

Macd. What's the disease he means ?

Mal. 'Tis call'd the evil :
A most miraculous work in this good king ;
Which often, since my here-remain in England,
I have seen him do. How he solicits heaven,
Himself best knows : but strangely visited people,
All swoln and ulcerous, pitiful to the eye,
The mere despair of surgery, he cures ;
Hanging a golden stamp¹⁶ about their necks,
Put on with holy prayers : and 'tis spoken,
To the succeeding royalty he leaves
The healing benediction. With this strange virtue,
He hath a heavenly gift of prophecy ;
And sundry blessings hang about his throne,
That speak him full of grace.

Enter ROSSE.

Macd. See, who comes here ?

Mal. My countryman ; but yet I know him not.

Macd. My ever-gentle cousin, welcome hither.

Mal. I know him now : Good God, betimes remove

¹⁵ Convinces, i. e. overcomes it. We have before seen this word used in the same Latin sense, at p. 33, Act i. Sc. 7, of this play. "To convince or convicte, to vanquish and overcome. Evinco."—BARET.

¹⁶ A golden stamp, i. e. the coin called an angel ; the value of which was ten shillings. The allusion to touching for the evil is a compliment to James, by whom it was practised.

'The mean that makes^a us strangers!

Rosse.

Sir, Amen.

Macd. Stands Scotland where it did?

Rosse.

Alas, poor country!

Almost afraid to know itself! It cannot
Be call'd our mother, but our grave: where nothing
But who knows nothing, is once seen to smile;
Where sighs, and groans, and shrieks that rent¹⁷ the air,
Are made, not mark'd; where violent sorrow seems
A modern ecstasy¹⁸; the dead man's knell
Is there scarce ask'd, for who; and good men's lives
Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying, or ere they sicken.

Macd.

O, relation

Too nice, and yet too true!

Mal.

What's the new'st grief?

Rosse. That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker;
Each minute teems a new one.

Macd.

How does my wife?

Rosse. Why, well.

Macd.

And all my children?

Rosse.

Well too¹⁹.

^a In the first folio this is printed "the meanes that makes us strangers." There is no doubt, however, that the poet wrote, with his cotemporaries, "the meane," in its old singular form, from the French moyen. The words are repeated in the second folio.

¹⁷ "To rent is an ancient verb, which has been long disused," say the editors. Mr. Knight properly preserves the archaism; Mr. Collier abandons it. Here is an example of its use by a contemporary of the poet:—

"Make known, why such an instrument
As Weston, a poore serving-man, should rent
The frame of this sad-good man's life."

W. S. in the Death of Overbury, 1616.

¹⁸ It has been before observed that Shakespeare uses ecstasy for every species of alienation of mind, whether proceeding from sorrow, joy, wonder, or any other exciting cause. Modern is generally used by him in the sense of common, trite. A modern ecstasy is therefore a common grief. Vide Act iii. Sc. 2, p. 60, note 3.

¹⁹ Thus in Antony and Cleopatra:—

Macd. The tyrant has not batter'd at their peace?

Rosse. No; they were well at peace, when I did leave them.

Macd. Be not a niggard of your speech; How goes it?

Rosse. When I came hither to transport the tidings, Which I have heavily borne, there ran a rumour Of many worthy fellows that were out; Which was to my belief witness'd the rather, For that I saw the tyrant's power a-foot: Now is the time of help! your eye in Scotland Would create soldiers, make our women fight, To doff their dire distresses.

Mal. Be it their comfort, We are coming thither: gracious England hath Lent us good Siward, and ten thousand men; An older, and a better soldier, none That Christendom gives out.

Rosse. 'Would, I could answer This comfort with the like! But I have words, That would be howl'd out in the desert air, Where hearing should not latch²⁰ them.

Macd. What concern they? The general cause? or is it a fee-grief²¹, Due to some single breast?

Rosse. No mind, that's honest, But in it shares some woe; though the main part Pertains to you alone.

“ We use
To say, the dead are well.”

²⁰ To latch (in the North) signifies the same as to catch. Thus also Golding, in his translation of the first book of Ovid's Metamorphoses:—

“ As though he would, at everie stride, betweene his teeth hir latch.”

²¹ Or is it a fee-grief, i. e. a peculiar sorrow, a grief that hath but a single owner. So in a Lover's Complaint:—

“ My woeful self that did in freedom stand,
And was my own fee-simple.”

Macd. If it be mine,
Keep it not from me, quickly let me have it.

Rosse. Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.

Macd. Humph! I guess at it.

Rosse. Your castle is surpris'd; your wife, and babes
Savagely slaughter'd: to relate the manner,
Were, on the quarry²² of these murder'd deer,
To add the death of you.

Mal. Merciful heaven!—

What, man! ne'er pull your hat upon your brows;
Give sorrow words: the grief, that does not speak,
Whispers the o'erfraught heart, and bids it break²³.

Macd. My children too?

Rosse. Wife, children, servants, all
That could be found.

Macd. And I must be from thence!
My wife kill'd too?

Rosse. I have said.

Mal. Be comforted:

Let's make us med'cines of our great revenge,
To cure this deadly grief.

Macd. He has no children^a.—All my pretty ones?

²² Quarry, the game after it is killed: it is a term used both in hunting and falconry. The old English term querre is used for the square spot wherein the dead game was deposited. Quarry is also used for the game pursued. See Act i. Sc. 2, note 5.

²³ In Montaigne's Essays by Florio, with which Shakespeare was familiar, we have:—"All passions that may be tasted and digested are but mean and slight."

"Curae leves loquuntur, ingentes stupent."

"Light cares can freely speake, Great cares heart rather breake."

And in Vittoria Corombona:—

"Those are killing griefs which dare not speak."

We have similar passages in Greene's Tragical History of Faire Bellora; and Daniel's Complaint of Rosamond.

^a It is most probable that this refers to Malcolm, and that

Did you say, all?—O, hell-kite!—All?
 What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,
 At one fell swoop²⁴?

Mal. Dispute it like a man.

Macd. I shall do so;

But I must also feel it as a man:
 I cannot but remember such things were,
 That were most precious to me.—Did heaven look on,
 And would not take their part? Sinful Macduff,
 They were all struck for thee! naught that I am,
 Not for their own demerits, but for mine,
 Fell slaughter on their souls; Heaven rest them now!

Mal. Be this the whetstone of your sword: let grief
 Convert to anger; blunt not the heart, enrage it.

Macd. O, I could play the woman with mine eyes,
 And braggart with my tongue!—But, gentle heavens,
 Cut short all intermission: front to front,
 Bring thou this fiend of Scotland, and myself;
 Within my sword's length set him; if he 'scape,
 Heaven forgive him too²⁵!

Mal. This tune²⁶ goes manly.

Come, go we to the king: our power is ready;
 Our lack is nothing but our leave: Macbeth
 Is ripe for shaking, and the powers above
 Put on their instruments. Receive what cheer you may;
 The night is long that never finds the day. [Exeunt.]

Macduff, rejecting his proffered comfort, turns to Rosse and says, "He, i. e. Malcolm, has no children—I cannot quit the subject, tell me more."

²⁴ At one fell swoop. Swoop, from the verb to swoop or sweep, is the descent of a bird of prey on his quarry. So in the White Devil, 1612:—

"That she may take away all at one swoop."

²⁵ Mason has pointed out a similar thought in The Chances of Beaumont and Fletcher:—"He scap'd me yesternight which if he do again adventure for, Heaven pardon him: I shall with all my heart."

²⁶ The old copy reads time. The alteration is Rowe's, but was perhaps unnecessary, as tune and time were formerly synonymous.

ACT V.

SCENE I. Dunsinane. A Room in the Castle.Enter a Doctor of Physick, and a waiting Gentlewoman.Doctor.

HAVE two nights watched with you, but can perceive no truth in your report. When was it she last walked ?

Gent. Since his majesty went into the field, I have seen her rise from her bed, throw her night-gown upon her, unlock her closet, take forth paper, fold it, write upon it, read it, afterwards seal it, and again return to bed ; yet all this while in a most fast sleep.

Doct. A great perturbation in nature ! to receive at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching.—In this slumbry agitation, besides her walking, and other actual performances, what, at any time, have you heard her say ?

Gent. That, sir, which I will not report after her.

Doct. You may, to me ; and 'tis most meet you should.

Gent. Neither to you, nor any one ; having no witness to confirm my speech.

Enter LADY MACBETH, with a Taper.

Lo you, here she comes ! This is her very guise ; and, upon my life, fast asleep. Observe her ; stand close.

Doct. How came she by that light ?

Gent. Why, it stood by her : she has light by her continually ; 'tis her command.

Doct. You see her eyes are open.

Gent. Ay, but their sense is shut¹.

Doct. What is it she does now? Look, how she rubs her hands.

Gent. It is an accustomed action with her, to seem thus washing her hands; I have known her continue in this a quarter of an hour.

Lady M. Yet here's a spot.

Doct. Hark, she speaks: I will set down what comes from her, to satisfy my remembrance the more strongly.

Lady M. Out, damned spot! out, I say!—One: Two: Why, then'tis time to do't:—Hell is murky²!—Fye, my lord, fye! a soldier, and afeard? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account?—Yet who would have thought the old man to have had so much blood in him?

Doct. Do you mark that?

Lady M. The thane of Fife had a wife: Where is she now?—What, will these hands ne'er be clean?—No more o' that, my lord, no more o' that: you mar all with this starting.

Doct. Go to, go to; you have known what you should not.

Gent. She has spoke what she should not, I am sure of that: Heaven knows what she has known.

¹ Ay, but their sense is shut. The old copy reads, "Ay, but their sense are shut." Malone has quoted other instances of the same inaccurate grammar, according to modern notions, from Julius Cæsar:—

"The posture of his blows are yet unknown."

And from the hundred and twelfth Sonnet of Shakespeare:—

"In so profound abysm I throw all care
Of others' voices, that my adder's sense
To critick and to flatterer stopped are."

Vide note on Hamlet, Act i. Sc. 1.

² Hell is murky. Lady Macbeth, in her dream, imagines herself talking to her husband, who, she supposes, had just said Hell is murky, i. e. hell is a dismal place to go to in consequence of such a deed, and repeats his words in contempt of his cowardice.—"Hell is murky!—Fye, my lord, fye! a soldier, and afeard?" This explanation is by Steevens, and appears to me very judicious.

Lady M. Here's the smell of the blood still: all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand³. Oh! oh! oh!

Doct. What a sigh is there! The heart is sorely charged.

Gent. I would not have such a heart in my bosom, for the dignity of the whole body.

Doct. Well, well, well.

Gent. 'Pray God, it be, sir.

Doct. This disease is beyond my practice: Yet I have known those which have walked in their sleep, who have died holily in their beds.

Lady M. Wash your hands, put on your night-gown; look not so pale:—I tell you yet again, Banquo's buried; he cannot come out on's grave.

Doct. Even so.

Lady M. To bed, to bed; there's knocking at the gate. Come, come, come, come, give me your hand; What's done, cannot be undone: To bed, to bed, to bed.

[Exit LADY MACBETH.]

Doct. Will she go now to bed?

Gent. Directly.

³ Mrs. Siddons, whose personation of Lady Macbeth will not easily be equalled, remarks, "How beautifully contrasted is the exclamation 'All the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand,' with the bolder image of Macbeth in expressing the same feeling: 'Will all great Neptune's ocean wash the blood clean from this hand?' And how appropriately either sex illustrates the same idea!" Fuseli observes that "Taste and smell, as sources of tragic emotion, in consequence of their power commanding gesture, seem scarcely admissible in art or on the theatre, because their extremes are more nearly allied to disgust, and loathsome or risible ideas, than to terror. The prophetic trance of Cassandra, who scents the prepared murder of Agamemnon at the threshold of the ominous hall, the desperate moan of Macbeth's queen, on seeing the visionary spot still uneffaced on her hand, are images snatched from the lap of terrors—but soon would cease to be so, were the artist or the actress to enforce the dreadful hint with indiscreet expression or gesture."

Doct. Foul whisp' rings are abroad : Unnatural deeds
 Do breed unnatural troubles : Infected minds
 To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets.
 More needs she the divine, than the physician.—
 God, God, forgive us all ! Look after her ;
 Remove from her the means of all annoyance,
 And still keep eyes upon her :—So, good night :
 My mind she has mated⁴, and amaz'd my sight :
 I think, but dare not speak.

Gent.

Good night, good doctor.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The Country near Dunsinane.

Enter with Drum and Colours, MENTETH, CATHNESS, ANGUS, LENOX, and Soldiers.

Ment. The English power is near, led on by Malcolm,

His uncle Siward¹, and the good Macduff.
 Revenges burn in them : for their dear causes
 Would, to the bleeding, and the grim alarm,
 Excite the mortified man².

Ang.

Near Birnam wood

Shall we well meet them ; that way are they coming.

Cath. Who knows, if Donalbain be with his brother ?

⁴ My mind she has mated. Mated, or amated, from matté, old French, signified to overcome, confound, dismay, or make afraid. The word is said to be obsolete in Phillips's World of Words, 1670. See Vol. vi. p. 181, note 16.

¹ "Duncan had two sons by his wife, who was the daughter of Siward, Earl of Northumberland."—Holinshed.

² By the mortified man is meant a religious man ; one who has mortified his passions, is dead to the world, has abandoned it, and all the affairs of it ; an ascetic. So in Monsieur D'Olive, 1606 :—

"He like a mortified hermit sits."

And in Love's Labour's Lost, Act i. Sc. 1 :—

"My loving lord, Dumain is mortified ;

The grosser manner of this world's delights

He throws upon the gross world's baser slaves"

Len. For certain, sir, he is not : I have a file
Of all the gentry ; there is Siward's son,
And many unrough³ youths, that even now
Protest their first of manhood.

Ment. What does the tyrant ?

Cath. Great Dunsinane he strongly fortifies :
Some say, he's mad ; others, that lesser hate him,
Do call it valiant fury : but, for certain,
He cannot buckle his distemper'd course^a
Within the belt of rule.

Ang. Now does he feel
His secret murders sticking on his hands ;
Now minutely revolts upbraid his faith-breach ;
Those he commands, move only in command,
Nothing in love : now does he feel his title
Hang loose about him, like a giant's robe
Upon a dwarfish thief.

Ment. Who then shall blame
His pester'd senses to recoil, and start,
When all that is within him does condemn
Itself, for being there ?

Cath. Well, march we on,
To give obedience where 'tis truly ow'd :
Meet we the med'cine⁴ of the sickly weal ;
And with him pour we, in our country's purge,
Each drop of us.

Len. Or so much as it needs,
To dew the sovereign flower, and drown the weeds.
Make we our march towards Birnam.

[Exeunt, marching.]

³ And many unrough youths. This expression means smooth-faced, unbearded. See the Tempest :—

“Till new born chins
Be rough and razorable.”

^a The old copies have “distemper'd cause.” The correction is by the late Mr. Sidney Walker. It also occurs in Mr. Collier's folio.

⁴ The med'cine, i. e. the physician. In The Winter's Tale, Camillo is called by Perdita “the medecin of our house.”

SCENE III. Dunsinane. A Room in the Castle.Enter MACBETH, Doctor, and Attendants.

Macb. Bring me no more reports; let them fly all;
 Till Birnam wood remove to Dunsinane,
 I cannot taint with fear. What's the boy Malcolm?
 Was he not born of woman? The spirits that know
 All mortal consequences, have pronounc'd me thus:
Fear not, Macbeth; no man, that's born of woman, Shall e'er have power upon thee.—Then fly, false
 thanes,

And mingle with the English epicures¹:
 The mind I sway by, and the heart I bear,
 Shall never sagg² with doubt, nor shake with fear.

Enter a Servant.

The devil damn thee black, thou cream-fac'd loon³!
 Where gott'st thou that goose look?

Serv. There is ten thousand——

Macb. Geese, villain?

Serv. Soldiers, sir.

Macb. Go, prick thy face, and over-red thy fear,
 Thou lily-liver'd boy. What soldiers, patch⁴?
 Death of thy soul! those linen cheeks of thine

¹ Shakespeare derived this thought from Holinshed:—"The Scottish people before had no knowledge of nor understanding of fine fare or riotous surfeit; yet after they had once tasted the sweet poisoned bait thereof," &c. "those superfluties which came into the realm of Scotland with Englishmen."—Hist. of Scotland, p. 179.

² To sag, or swag, is to hang down by its own weight, or by an overload.

³ Cream-fac'd loon. This word, which signifies a base object fellow, is now only used in Scotland; it was formerly common in England, but spelt lown, and is justly considered by Horne Tooke as the past participle of to low or abase. Lowl has the same origin.

⁴ Patch, an appellation of contempt, signifying fool or low wretch.

Are counsellors to fear. What soldiers, whey-face ?

Serv. The English force, so please you.

Macb. Take thy face hence. [Exit Serv.].—Seyton!

I am sick at heart,

When I behold—Seyton, I say !—This push
Will chair me ever, or disseat me now⁵.

I have liv'd long enough : my way of life
Is fall'n into the sear⁶, the yellow leaf :

And that which should accompany old age,
As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends,
I must not look to have ; but, in their stead,
Curses, not loud, but deep, mouth-honour, breath,
Which the poor heart would fain deny, and dare not.
Seyton !——

⁵ The folio has "Will cheere me ever." The correction was suggested by Dr. Percy.

⁶ Sear is dry, withered. We have the same expression and sentiment in Spenser's Pastorals :—

"Also my lustful leaf is drie and seure."

Johnson would read "May of life." It must be confessed that it conveys a pleasing image, and might be supported, but the commentators have mistaken the phrase, way of life (Henley however is to be excepted), which Mr. Gifford has shown to be a simple periphrasis for life. A few examples will make this clear :—

"If that when I was mistress of myself,
And in my way of youth clear and untainted."

Massinger's Roman Actor.

"In way of youth I did enjoy one friend."

A very Woman.

i. e. in my youth.

"So much nobler

Shall be your way of justice." Thierry and Theodoret.

i. e. your justice.

"Thus ready for the way of life or death,

I wait the sharpest blow." Pericles.

i. e. for life or death. The Latin cursus vitæ has the same signification.

"To return to Macbeth : the sere and yellow leaf is the commencement of the autumn of life ; to this he has attained, and he laments, in a strain of great pathos and beauty, that it is unaccompanied by those blessings which render old age supportable. As his manhood was without virtue, so he has now before him the certain prospect of an old age without honour."

Enter SEYTON.

Sey. What is your gracious pleasure?

Macb. What news more?

Sey. All is confirm'd, my lord, which was reported.

Macb. I'll fight, till from my bones my flesh be hack'd.

Give me my armour.

Sey. 'Tis not needed yet.

Macb. I'll put it on.

Send out more horses, skirr⁷ the country round;
Hang those that talk of fear.—Give me mine armour.—
How does your patient, doctor?

Doct. Not so sick, my lord,
As she is troubled with thick-coming fancies,
That keep her from her rest.

Macb. Cure her of that:
Canst thou not minister to a mind diseas'd⁸;
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow;
Raze out the written troubles of the brain;
And, with some sweet oblivious antidote,
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff⁹
Which weighs upon the heart?

Doct. Therein the patient
Must minister to himself.

Macb. Throw physick to the dogs, I'll none of it.—
Come, put mine armour on; give me my staff:—

⁷ Skirr, i. e. scour the country round.

⁸ The following very remarkable passage in the Amadigi of Bernardo Tasso, which bears a striking resemblance to the words of Macbeth, was first pointed out in Mr. Weber's edition of Ford:—

“Ma chi puote con erbe, od argomenti

Guarir l'infermità del intelletto?”

Cant. xxxvi. St. 37.

The “nullis medicabilis herbis” of Ovid of course suggested it.

⁹ It has been proposed to read grief here, but the iteration stuff'd and stuff, though now displeasing to our ears, Malone has shown from numerous similar examples of repetition in the poet, was likely to occur. To cleanse the bosom of grief is a thought that would have hardly entered his mind.

Seyton, send out.—Doctor, the thanes fly from me :—
 Come. sir. despatch :—If thou couldst, doctor, cast
 The water of my land¹⁰, find her disease,
 And purge it to a sound and pristine health,
 I would applaud thee to the very echo,
 That should applaud again.—Pull't off, I say.—
 What rhubarb, senna¹¹, or what purgative drug,
 Would scour these English hence?—Hear'st thou of them?

Doct. Ay, my good lord ; your royal preparation
 Makes us hear something.

Macb. Bring it after me.—
 I will not be afraid of death and bane,
 Till Birnam forest come to Dunsinane. [Exit.]

Doct. Were I from Dunsinane away and clear,
 Profit again should hardly draw me here. [Exit.]

SCENE IV. Country near Dunsinane : A Wood in view.

Enter, with Drum and Colours, MALCOLM, old SIWARD and his Son, MACDUFF, MENTETH, CATHNESS, ANGUS, LENOX, ROSSE, and Soldiers, marching.

Mal. Cousins, I hope the days are near at hand
 That chambers will be safe.

Ment. We doubt it nothing.

Siw. What wood is this before us?

Ment. The wood of Birnam.

Mal. Let every soldier hew him down a bough¹,
 And bear't before him ; thereby shall we shadow

¹⁰ To cast the water was the empiric phrase for finding out disorders, used by the water doctors.

¹¹ What rhubarb, senna. The first folio reads cyme ; the second cæny. The emendation is Rowe's.

¹ A similar incident is recorded by Olaus Magnus, in his Northern History, lib. vii. cap. xx. De Strategemate Hachonis per Frondes.

The numbers of our host, and make discovery
Err in report of us.

Sold. It shall be done.

Siw. We learn no other, but the confident tyrant Keeps still in Dunsinane, and will endure
Our setting down before't.

Mal. 'Tis his main hope :
For where there is advantage to be gone²,
Both more and less³ have given him the revolt ;
And none serve with him but constrained things,
Whose hearts are absent too.

Macd. Let our just censures
Attend the true event, and put we on Industrious soldiership.

Siw. The time approaches,
That will with due decision make us know
What we shall say we have, and what we owe⁴.
Thoughts speculative their unsure hopes relate ;
But certain issue strokes must arbitrate :
Towards which, advance the war. [Exeunt, marching]

SCENE V. Dunsinane. Within the Castle.

Enter, with Drums and Colours, MACBETH, SEYTON, and Soldiers.

Macb. Hang out our banners, on the outward walls
The cry is still, They come. Our castle's strength

² The old copy reads:—

“For where there is advantage to be given.”

Johnson thought it should be “advantage to be gone,” and I now think he was right. In my former edition I had said, we might perhaps read:— “For where there is advantage to be gain'd.”

³ More and less, i. e. greater and less, or high and low, those of all ranks.

⁴ Make us know

What we shall say we have, and what we owe.

i. e. when we shall know both our rights and duties.

Will laugh a siege to scorn : here let them lie,
 Till famine, and the ague, eat them up :
 Were they not forc'd with those that should be ours,
 We might have met them dareful, beard to beard,
 And beat them backward home.—What is that noise ?

[A cry within, of women.]

Sey. It is the cry of women, my good lord.

Macb. I have almost forgot the taste of fears :
 The time has been, my senses would have cool'd
 To hear a night-shriek ; and my fell¹ of hair
 Would at a dismal treatise rouse, and stir
 As life were in't : I have supp'd full with horrors ;
 Direness, familiar to my slaught'rous thoughts,
 Cannot once start me.—Wherefore was that cry ?

Sey. The queen, my lord, is dead.

Macb. She should have died hereafter ;
 There would have been a time for such a word.—
 To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
 Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
 To the last syllable of recorded time² ;
 And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
 The way to dusty death³. Out, out, brief candle !
 Life's but a walking shadow ; a poor player,
 That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,
 And then is heard no more : it is a tale

¹ My fell of hair, i. e. my hairy part, my capilitium. Fell is skin or hide, with the hair or wool on it. Thus in King Lear :—

“The gougeres shall devour them flesh and fell.”

² A writer in the Edinburgh Review has the following judicious remark on these passages :—“Macbeth, left alone, resumes much of that connection with humanity which he had so long abandoned : his thoughtfulness becomes pathetic ; and when at last he dies the death of a soldier, the stern satisfaction with which we contemplate the act of justice that destroys him, is unalloyed by feelings of personal wrath or hatred. His fall is a sacrifice, and not a butchery.”

³ My friend Mr. Douce has observed that, perhaps no quotation is better calculated to show the propriety of the epithet “dusty death,” than the following grand lines in the Vision of

Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, Signifying nothing.—

Enter a Messenger.

Thou com'st to use thy tongue ; thy story quickly.

Mess. Gracious my lord,
I should report that which I say I saw,
But know not how to do it.

Macb. Well, say, sir.

Mess. As I did stand my watch upon the hill,
I look'd toward Birnam, and anon, methought,
The wood began to move.

Macb. Liar and slave !

Mess. Let me endure your wrath, if't be not so :
Within this three mile may you see it coming ;
I say, a moving grove.

Macb. If thou speak'st false,
Upon the next tree shalt thou hang alive,
Till famine cling⁴ thee : if thy speech be sooth,
I care not if thou dost for me as much.—
I pull in resolution ; and begin
To doubt the equivocation of the fiend,
That lies like truth : Fear not, till Birnam wood
Do come to Dunsinane ;—and now a wood

Pierce Plowman :—

“ Death came driving after, and all to dust pashed, Kings and Kaysers, Knightes and Popes.”

⁴ To cling, in the northern counties, signifies to shrivel, wither, or dry up. Clung-wood, is wood of which the sap is entirely dried or spent ; and “ Cattle are said to be clung, or hide-bound, when the skin doth cleave so fast to their sides that they cannot stir.”—Thomas's Dict. v. Coriago. Pope expresses the same idea well in the 19th Iliad, v. 166 :—

“ Shrunk with dry famine, and with toils declin'd.”

I cannot think, with Mr. Collier, that there is any difficulty in assigning a precise meaning to the word. Mason has shown that the phrase pull in, may be illustrated by a passage in Fletcher's Sea Voyage :—

“ And all my spirits,
As if they heard my passing bell go for me,
Pull in their powers, and give me up to destiny.”

Comes toward Dunsinane.—Arm, arm, and out!—
 If this, which he avouches, does appear,
 There is nor flying hence, nor tarrying here.
 I 'gin to be a-weary of the sun,
 And wish the estate o' the world were now undone.—
 Ring the alarum-bell:—Blow, wind! come wrack!
 At least we'll die with harness on our back.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. The same. A Plain before the Castle.

Enter, with Drums and Colours, MALCOLM, old SIWARD, MACDUFF, &c. and their Army, with Boughs.

Mal. Now near enough; your leavy screens throw down,

And show like those you are:—You, worthy uncle,
 Shall, with my cousin, your right noble son,
 Lead our first battle: worthy Macduff, and we,
 Shall take upon us⁵ what else remains to do,
 According to our order.

Siw. Fare you well.—

Do we but find the tyrant's power to-night,
 Let us be beaten, if we cannot fight.

Macd. Make all our trumpets speak; give them all breath,

Those clamorous harbingers of blood and death.

SCENE VII. The same. Another Part of the Plain.

Enter MACBETH.

Macb. They have tied me to a stake; I cannot fly,
 But, bear-like, I must fight the course¹.—What's he,

⁵ The first folio reads upon's.

¹ But, bearlike, I must fight the course. This was a phrase at bear-baiting. "Also you shall see two ten dog courses at the great bear."—Antipodes, by Brome.

'That was not born of woman? Such a one
Am I to fear, or none.

Enter young SIWARD.

Yo. Siw. What is thy name?

Macb. Thou'lt be afraid to hear it.

Yo. Siw. No; though thou call'st thyself a hotter name

Than any is in hell.

Macb. My name's Macbeth.

Yo. Siw. The devil himself could not pronounce a title

More hateful to mine ear.

Macb. No, nor more fearful.

Yo. Siw. Thou liest, abhorred tyrant; with my sword

I'll prove the lie thou speak'st.

[They fight, and young Siward is slain.]

Macb. Thou wast born of woman.—

But swords I smile at, weapons laugh to scorn,

Brandish'd by man that's of a woman born. [Exit.]

Alarums. Enter MACDUFF.

Macd. That way the noise is :—Tyrant, show thy face :

If thou be'st slain, and with no stroke of mine,

My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still.

I cannot strike at wretched kernes, whose arms

Are hir'd to bear their staves; either thou, Macbeth,

Or else my sword, with an unbatter'd edge,

I sheathe again undeeded. There thou should'st be;

By this great clatter, one of greatest note

Seems bruted²: Let me find him, fortune!

And more I beg not.

[Exit. Alarum.]

² Bruited is reported, noised abroad; from bruit, Fr. So in King Henry IV. Part II.—“His death

Being bruted once,” &c.

Enter MALCOLM and old SIWARD.

Siw. This way, my lord ;—the castle's gently render'd :

The tyrant's people on both sides do fight ;
The noble thanes do bravely in the war ;
The day almost itself professes yours,
And little is to do.

Mal. We have met with foes
That strike beside us.

Siw. Enter, sir, the castle.
[Exeunt. Alarum.]

Re-enter MACBETH.

Macb. Why should I play the Roman fool, and die³
On mine own sword ? whiles I see lives, the gashes
Do better upon them.

Re-enter MACDUFF.

Macd. Turn, hell-hound, turn.

Macb. Of all men else I have avoided thee :
But get thee back, my soul is too much charg'd
With blood of thine already.

Macd. I have no words,
My voice is in my sword⁴ ; thou bloodier villain
Than terms can give thee out ! [They fight.]

Macb. Thou lovest labour :
As easy mayst thou the intrenchant air⁵
With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed :

³ Why should I play the Roman fool, and die. Alluding to the high Roman fashion of self-destruction, as in Brutus, Cassius, Antony, &c. The suicide of Cato of Utica is mentioned in Julius Cæsar :—

“ I did blame Cato for the death
Which he did give himself.”

⁴ My voice is in my sword. Thus Casca, in Julius Cæsar :—
“ Speak, hands, for me.”

⁵ The intrenchant air, i. e. the air which cannot be cut. So in Hamlet :—
“ For it is as the air invulnerable.”

Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests ;
 I bear a charmed life⁶, which must not yield
 To one of woman born.

Macd. Despair thy charm ;
 And let the angel, whom thou still hast serv'd,
 Tell thee, Macduff was from his mother's womb
 Untimely ripp'd.

Macb. Accursed be that tongue that tells me so,
 For it hath cow'd my better part of man :
 And be these juggling fiends no more believ'd,
 That palter with us in a double sense ;
 That keep the word of promise to our ear,
 And break it to our hope.—I'll not fight with thee.

Macd. Then yield thee, coward,
 And live to be the show and gaze o' the time.
 We'll have thee, as our rarer monsters are,
 Painted upon a pole ; and underwrit,
Here may you see the tyrant.

Macb. I will not yield,
 To kiss the ground before young Malcolm's feet,
 And to be baited with the rabble's curse.
 Though Birnam wood be come to Dunsinane,
 And thou oppos'd, being of no woman born,
 Yet I will try the last : Before my body
 I throw my warlike shield ; lay on, Macduff ;
 And damn'd be him that first cries, Hold, enough!
 [Exeunt, fighting.]

⁶ I bear a charmed life. In the days of chivalry, the champion's arms being ceremoniously blessed, each took an oath that he used no charmed weapons. Macbeth, in allusion to this custom, tells Macduff of the security he had in the prediction of the spirit. To this likewise Posthumus alludes in Cymbeline, Act v.—

“ I, in mine own woe charm'd,
 Could not find death.”

Again in Spenser's Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4 :—

“ He bears a charmed shield,

And eke enchanted arms, that none can pierce.”

⁷ To cry hold! was the word of yielding (according to Carew's

Retreat. Flourish. Re-enter, with Drum and Colours, MALCOLM, old SIWARD, ROSSE, LENOX, ANGUS,
CATHNESS, MENTETH, and Soldiers.

Mal. I would, the friends we miss were safe arriv'd.

Siw. Some must go off: and yet, by these I see,
So great a day as this is cheaply bought.

Mal. Macduff is missing, and your noble son.

Rosse. Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier's debt;
He only liv'd but till he was a man:
The which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd
In the unshrinking station where he fought,
But like a man he died.

Siw. Then he is dead?

Rosse. Ay, and brought off the field: your cause of sorrow

Must not be measur'd by his worth, for then
It hath no end.

Siw. Had he his hurts before?

Rosse. Ay, on the front.

Siw. Why then, God's soldier be he!

Had I as many sons as I have hairs,
I would not wish them to a fairer death⁸:
And so his knell is knoll'd.

Survey of Cornwall, p. 74), that is, when one of the combatants cries so. To cry hold! when persons were fighting, was an authoritative way of separating them, according to the old military laws. This is shown by the following passage produced by Mr. Tollet: it declares it to be a capital offence "Whosoever shall strike stroke at his adversary, either in the heat or otherwise, if a third do cry hold, to the intent to part them."

Bellay's Instructions for the Wars, 1599.

This illustrates the passage in Act i. Sc. 5, of this play:—

"Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark

To cry Hold! hold!"

Macd. Hail, king! for so thou art: Behold, where stands
The usurper's cursed head: the time is free :
I see thee compass'd with thy kingdom's pearl⁹,
That speak my salutation in their minds ;
Whose voices I desire aloud with mine,—
Hail, king of Scotland !

All. Hail, king of Scotland !

[Flourish.

Mal. We shall not spend a large expense¹⁰ of time,
Before we reckon with your several loves,
And make us even with you. My thanes and kinsmen, the fore part;' he replied, 'I am right glad; neither wish I any other death to me or mine.'"—Camden's Remaines.

The same incident is recorded by Holinshed, vol. i. p. 192.

⁹ Thy kingdom's pearl, i. e. thy kingdom's ornament, the choice or best part, from the high estimation in which pearls were held. So in Endymion's Song and Tragedy:—

“An earl,

And worthily then termed Albion's pearl.”

Holinshed mentions Scottish pearls. Rowe altered this to peers, without authority.

¹⁰ Thus the old copy. Steevens justly observes that “To spend an expense is a phrase with which no reader will be satisfied.” I think with him that “we certainly owe it to a mistake of a transcriber, or the negligence of a printer.” It is possible that the poet's word was expanse for space, a sense in which it is often used, and especially by Locke, who well knew the proper force and meaning of words. Or it may have been large extent, a phrase for space, used by Charles Cotton:—

“Life in its large extent is scarce a span.”

In such an honour nam'd¹¹. What's more to do,
 Which would be planted newly with the time,—
 As calling home our exil'd friends abroad,
 That fled the snares of watchful tyranny ;
 Producing forth the cruel ministers
 Of this dead butcher, and his fiend-like queen ;
 Who, as 'tis thought, by self and violent hands
 Took off her life ;—this, and what needful else
 That calls upon us, by the grace of Grace,
 We will perform in measure, time, and place :
 So thanks to all at once, and to each one,
 Whom we invite to see us crown'd at Scone.

[Flourish. Exeunt.]

¹¹ “ Malcolm, immediately after his coronation, called a parliament at Forfair ; in the which he rewarded them with lands and livings that had assisted him against Macbeth. Manie of them that were before thanes were at this time made earles ; as Fife, Menteith, Atholl, Levenox, Murrey, Caithness, Rosse, and Angus.” —Holinshed's History of Scotland, p. 176.

HAMLET.

Ophelia. Good night, sweet ladies, good night.

ACT iv. SC. 5.

HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THE original story on which this play is built may be found in Saxo Grammaticus, the Danish historian. From thence Belleforest adopted it in his collection of novels, in seven volumes, which he began in 1564, and continued to publish through succeeding years. It was from Belleforest that the old black letter prose Hystorie of Hamblet was translated; the earliest edition of which, known to the commentators, was dated in 1608; but it is supposed that there were earlier impressions.

The following passage is found in an Epistle, by Thomas Nashe, prefixed to Greene's Arcadia, which was published in 1589:—"I will turn back to my first text of studies of delight, and talk a little in friendship with a few of our rival translators. It is a common practice now-a-days, among a sort of shifting companions, that runne through every art and thrive by none, to leave the trade of Noverint [i. e. the law] whereunto they were born, and busie themselves with the endeavours of art, that could scarcely latinize their neck-verse, if they should have neede; yet English Seneca, read by candle-light, yeelds many good sentences, as Bloud is a beggar, and so forth: and if you entreat him faire in a frosty morning, he will affoord you whole Hamlets, I should say, Handfuls of tragical speeches. But O grief! Tempus edax rerum—what is it that will last always? The sea exhaled by drops will in continuance be drie; and Seneca, let bloud line by line. and page by page, at length must needs die to our stage."

It is manifest from this passage that some play on the story of Hamlet had been exhibited before the year 1589. Malone thinks that it was not Shakespeare's drama, but an elder performance on which, with the aid of the old prose History of Hamblet, his tragedy was formed.

In a tract, entitled Wits Miserie, or the World's Madnesse, discovering the incarnate Devils of the Age, published by Thomas Lodge in 1596, one of the devils is said to be "a foule lubber, and looks as pale as the vizard of the ghost, who cried so miserably at the theatre, Hamlet, revenge." But it is supposed that this also may refer to an elder performance.

Dr. Percy possessed a copy of Speght's edition of Chaucer, which had been Gabriel Harvey's, who had written his name and the date, 1598, both at the beginning and end of the volume, and many remarks in the intermediate leaves; among which are these words:—"The younger sort take much delight in Shakespeare's Venus and Adonis; but his Lucrece, and his tragedy of Hamlet, Prince of Denmarke, have it in them to please the wiser sort." Malone doubts whether this was written in 1598, because translated Tasso is named in another note; but it is not necessary that the allusion should be to Fairfax's translation, which was not printed till 1600: it may refer to the version of the first five books of the Jerusalem, published by R. C[arew] in 1594.

We may therefore safely place the date of the first composition of Hamlet at least as early as 1597; and, for reasons adduced by Mr. George Chalmers, we may presume that it was revised and the additions made to it in the year 1600.

The first entry on the Stationers' books is by James Roberts, July 26, 1602; and a copy of the play in its first state, printed for N. L. and John Trundell, in 1603, has recently been discovered. As in the case of the earliest impressions of Romeo and Juliet, and the Merry Wives of Windsor, this edition of Hamlet appears to have been either printed from an imperfect manuscript of the prompt books, or the playhouse copy, or stolen from the author's papers. It is next to impossible that it can have been taken down during the representation, as some have supposed was the case with the other two plays.

The variations of this early copy from the play of Hamlet, in its improved state, are too numerous and striking to admit a doubt of the play having been subsequently revised, amplified, and altered by the poet. There are even some variations in the plot; the principal of which are, that Horatio announces to the Queen Hamlet's unexpected return from his voyage to England; and that the Queen is expressly declared to be innocent of any participation in the murder of Hamlet's father, and privy to his intention of revenging his death. There are also some few lines and passages which do not appear in the revised copy. The principal variations are noticed in the course of the notes*.

It again issued from the press in 1604, in its corrected and amended state, and in the title-page is stated to be "newly imprinted, and enlarged to almost as much again as it was, according to the true and perfect copy." From these words Malone had drawn the natural conclusion that a former less perfect copy had issued from the press: but his star was not propitious; he never saw it. Though it is said to have formed part of the collection of Sir Thomas Hanmer, it only came to light at the commencement of the year 1825; too late, alas! even to gratify the enthusiasm of his zealous friend, that worthy man, James Boswell; upon whom devolved the office of giving to the world the accumulated labours of Malone's latter years, devoted to the illustration of Shakespeare.

* There are some singular variations in the names of the Dramatis Personæ. Corambis and Montano are the names given to the Polonius and Reynaldo of the revised play; for Rosencrantz and Guildenstern we have Rosencraft and Gilderstone; and Osrick is merely designated a Braggart Gentleman.

The character of Hamlet has been frequently discussed, and with a variety of contradictory opinions. Johnson and Steevens have made severe animadversions upon some parts of his conduct. A celebrated writer of Germany has very skilfully pointed out the cause of the defects in Hamlet's character, which unfit him for the dreadful office to which he is called. "It is clear to me," says Goëthé, "that Shakespeare's intention was to exhibit the effects of a great action, imposed as a duty upon a mind too feeble for its accomplishment. In this sense I find the character consistent throughout. Here is an oak planted in a china vase, proper to receive only the most delicate flowers. The roots strike out, and the vessel flies to pieces. A pure, noble, highly moral disposition, but without that energy of soul which constitutes the hero, sinks under a load which it can neither support nor resolve to abandon altogether. All his obligations are sacred to him; but this alone is above his powers! An impossibility is required at his hands; not an impossibility in itself, but that which is so to him. Observe how he shifts, turns, hesitates, advances, and recedes! how he is continually reminded and reminding himself of his great commission, which he, nevertheless in the end, seems almost entirely to lose sight of, and this without ever recovering his former tranquillity*."

Dr. Akenside suggested that the madness of Hamlet is not altogether feigned; and the notion has of late been revived. Dr. Ferriar, in his Essay towards a Theory of Apparitions, has termed the state of mind which Shakespeare exhibits to us in Hamlet,—as the consequence of conflicting passions and events operating on a frame of acute sensibility,—latent lunacy.

"It has often occurred to me," says Dr. F., "that Shakespeare's character of Hamlet can only be understood on this principle:—He feigns madness for political purposes, while the poet means to represent his understanding as really (and unconsciously to himself) unhinged by the cruel circumstances in which he is placed. The horror of the communication made by his father's spectre, the necessity of belying his attachment to an innocent and deserving object, the certainty of his mother's guilt, and the supernatural impulse by which he is goaded to an act of assassination abhorrent to his nature, are causes sufficient to overwhelm and distract a mind previously disposed to "weakness and to melancholy," and originally full of tenderness and natural affection. By referring to the play it will be seen that his real insanity is only developed after the mock play. Then, in place of a systematic conduct, conducive to his purposes, he becomes irresolute, inconsequent; and the plot appears to stand unaccountably still. Instead of striking at his object, he resigns himself to the current of events, and sinks at length ignobly under the stream*."

A comedian of considerable talents has entered at large into the question of Hamlet's madness, and has endeavoured to show that the poet meant to represent him as insane†. Mr. Boswell, on the contrary, in a very judicious and ingenious review of Hamlet's character, combats the supposition, and thinks it entirely without foundation. He argues that "the sentiments which fall from Hamlet in his soliloquies, or in confidential communication with Horatio, evince not only a sound but an acute and vigorous understanding. His misfortunes, indeed, and a sense of shame, from the hasty and incestuous marriage of his mother, have sunk him into a state of weakness and melancholy; but though his mind is enfeebled, it is by no means deranged. It would have been little in the manner of Shakespeare to introduce two persons in the same play whose intellects were disordered; but he has rather, in this instance, as in King Lear, a second time effected what, as far as I can recollect, no other writer has ever ventured to attempt—the exhibition on the same scene of real and fictitious madness in contrast with each other. In carrying his design into execution, Hamlet feels no difficulty in imposing upon the King, whom he detests; or upon Polonius, and his schoolfellows, whom he despises: but the case is very different indeed in his interviews with Ophelia; aware of the submissive mildness of her character, which leads her to be subject to the influence of her father and her brother, he cannot venture to entrust her with his secret. In her presence, therefore, he has not only to assume a disguise, but to restrain himself from those expressions of affection which a lover must find it most difficult to repress in the presence of his mistress. In this tumult of conflicting feelings, he is led to overact his part, from a fear of falling below it; and thus gives an appearance of rudeness and harshness to that which is, in fact, a painful struggle to conceal his tenderness‡."

Mr. Richardson, in his Essay on the Character of Hamlet, has well observed that "the spirit of that remarkable scene with ‡ Boswell's edition of Malone's Shakespeare, vol. vii. p. 536.

Ophelia, where he tells her, 'get thee to a nunnery,' is frequently misunderstood; and especially by the players. At least it does not appear to have been the poet's intention that the air and manner of Hamlet in this scene should be perfectly grave and serious; nor is there anything in the dialogue to justify the grave and tragic tone with which it is frequently spoken. Let Hamlet be represented as delivering himself in a light and airy, unconcerned and thoughtless manner, and the rudeness so much complained of will disappear." His conduct to Ophelia is intended to confirm and publish the notion he would convey of his pretended insanity, which could not be marked by any circumstance so strongly as that of treating her with harshness or indifference. The sincerity and ardour of his passion for her had undergone no change: he could not explain himself to her; and, in the difficult and trying circumstances in which he was placed, had therefore no alternative.

The poet indeed has marked with a master hand the amiable and polished character of Hamlet. Ophelia designates him as having been "The glass of fashion, and the mould of form;" and though circumstances have unsettled him, and thrown over his natural disposition the clouds of melancholy, the kindness of his disposition and his natural hilarity break through on every occasion which arises to call them forth.

Mr. Boswell has remarked, that "the scene with the grave-diggers shows, in a striking point of view, his good-natured affability. The reflections which follow afford new proofs of his amiable character. The place where he stands, the frame of his own thoughts, and the objects which surround him, suggest the vanity of all human pursuits; but there is nothing harsh or caustic in his satire; his observations are dictated rather by feelings of sorrow than of anger; and the sprightliness of his wit, which misfortune has repressed, but cannot altogether extinguish, has thrown over the whole a truly pathetic cast of humorous sadness. Those gleams of sunshine, which serve only to show us the scattered fragments of a brilliant imagination, crushed and broken by calamity, are much more affecting than a long uninterrupted train of monotonous woe."

Coleridge has said that "in Hamlet Shakespeare seems to have wished to exemplify the moral necessity of a due balance between our attention to the objects of our senses, and our meditation on the working of our minds,—an equilibrium between the real and the imaginary worlds." Mr. Strachey has, in a recent Essay on the play, entered more at large into this view of the character, and has endeavoured to show that Shakespeare has here resolved the problem "how to reconcile Thought and Action, so that the latter shall be rational, deliberative, and conscientious, and yet not paralysed, nor enfeebled by a too great sense of responsibility and fear of consequences."

HAMLET,
PRINCE OF DENMARK.

ACT I.

SCENE I. Elsinore. A Platform before the Castle.

FRANCISCO on his Post. Enter to him BERNARDO.

Bernardo.

WHO'S there?

Fran. Nay, answer me¹; stand, and unfold

Yourself.

Ber. Long live the king!

Fran. Bernardo?

Ber. He.

Fran. You come most carefully upon your hour.

Ber. 'Tis now struck twelve; get thee to bed, Francisco.

Fran. For this relief, much thanks: 'tis bitter cold,
And I am sick at heart.

Ber. Have you had quiet guard?

Fran. Not a mouse stirring.

¹ i. e. me who am already on the watch, and have a right to demand the watchword; which appears to have been, "Long live the king!"

Ber. Well, good night.
If you do meet Horatio and Marcellus,
The rivals³ of my watch, bid them make haste.

Enter HORATIO and MARCELLUS.

Fran. I think I hear them.—Stand!—Who's there?

Hor. Friends to this ground.

Mar. And liegemen to the Dane.

Fran. Give you good night.

Mar. O, farewell, honest soldier:
Who hath reliev'd you?

Fran. Bernardo has my place.
Give you good night. [Exit FRANCISCO.]

Mar. Holla! Bernardo!

Ber. Say.

What, is Horatio there?

Hor. A piece of him.

Ber. Welcome, Horatio; welcome, good Marcellus.

Hor. What, has this thing appear'd again to-night⁴?

Ber. I have seen nothing.

Mar. Horatio says, 'tis but our fantasy;
And will not let belief take hold of him,
Touching this dreaded sight, twice seen of us;
Therefore I have entreated him along
With us to watch the minutes of this night;

³ Shakespeare uses rivals for associates, partners; and competitor has the same sense throughout these plays. It is the original sense of rivalis. The etymology was pointed out by Acro Grammaticus in his Scholia on Horace: "A rivo dicto rivales qui in agris rivum haberent communem, et propter eum sæpe discrepabant." Streams are frequently very variable boundaries, encroaching or receding by time or flood on one side or the other, and this is the cause that the term for neighbours, derived from a limit so jealously watched, took very readily a secondary sense by its application to competitors for an advantage.

⁴ So the quartos. The folio gives this line to Marcellus.

That, if again this apparition come,
He may approve⁵ our eyes, and speak to it.

Hor. Tush! tush! 'twill not appear.

Ber. Sit down awhile;

And let us once again assail your ears,
That are so fortified against our story,
What we two nights have seen.

Hor. Well, sit we down,

And let us hear Bernardo speak of this.

Ber. Last night of all,

When yond same star, that's westward from the pole,
Had made his course t'illuminate that part of heaven
Where now it burns, Marcellus, and myself,
The bell then beating one,—

Mar. Peace, break thee off; look, where it comes again!

Enter Ghost.

Ber. In the same figure like the king that's dead.

Mar. Thou art a scholar, speak to it, Horatio⁶.

Ber. Looks it not like the king? mark it, Horatio.

Hor. Most like:—it harrows⁷ me with fear, and wonder.

Ber. It would be spoke to.

Mar. Question it, Horatio.

Hor. What art thou, that usurp'st this time of night,

⁵ To approve or confirm. “Ratum habere aliquid.”—Baret.

⁶ It was a vulgar notion that a supernatural being could only be spoken to with effect by persons of learning; exorcisms being usually practised by the clergy in Latin. Toby, in The Night Walker of Beaumont and Fletcher, says:—

“Let's call the butler up, for he speaks Latin,
And that will daunt the devil.”

⁷ The first quarto reads, “it horrors me.” To harrow is to distress, to vex, to disturb. To harry and to harass have the same origin, from the Gothic haer, an armed force. Milton has the word in Comus:—

“Amaz'd I stood, harrow'd with grief and fear.”

Together with that fair and warlike form
 In which the majesty of buried Denmark
 Did sometimes march? by heaven I charge thee.
 speak.

Mar. It is offended.

Ber. See! it stalks away.

Hor. Stay; speak, speak, I charge thee, speak.

[Exit Ghost.

Mar. 'Tis gone, and will not answer.

Ber. How now, Horatio? you tremble, and look pale :

Is not this something more than fantasy?

What think you on't?

Hor. Before my God, I might not this believe,
 Without the sensible and true avouch
 Of mine own eyes.

Mar. Is it not like the king?

Hor. As thou art to thyself :

Such was the very armour he had on,
 When he the ambitious Norway combated;
 So frown'd he once, when in an angry parle⁸,
 He smote the sledded Polack⁹ on the ice.

'Tis strange.

Mar. Thus, twice before, and just¹⁰ at this dead
 hour,
 With martial stalk hath he gone by our watch.

⁸ Parle, the same as parley, a conference between enemies.

⁹ i. e. the sledged Polander; Polaque, Fr. the old copy reads Pollar. Mr. Boswell suggests that it is just possible the old reading may be right, pole-ax being put for the person who carried the pole-axe, a mark of rank among the Muscovites, as he has shown from Milton's Brief History of Muscovy.

¹⁰ The quarto of 1603, and that of 1604, have jump. The folio reads just. Jump and just were synonymous in the time of Shakespeare. So in Chapman's May Day, 1611:—

“Your appointment was jumpe at three with me.”

“Thou bendest neither one way nor tother, but art even jumpe stark naught.”—Baret, B. 486.

Hor. In what particular thought to work, I know not ;

But, in the gross and scope of mine opinion,
This bodes some strange eruption to our state.

Mar. Good now, sit down, and tell me, he that knows,
Why this same strict and most observant watch
So nightly toils the subject of the land ?
And why such daily cast of brazen cannon,
And foreign mart for implements of war ?
Why such impress¹¹ of shipwrights, whose sore task
Does not divide the Sunday from the week ?
What might be toward, that this sweaty haste
Doth make the night joint-labourer with the day ;
Who is't that can inform me ?

Hor. That can I ;
At least, the whisper goes so. Our last king,
Whose image even but now appear'd to us,
Was, as you know, by Fortinbras of Norway,
Thereto prick'd on by a most emulate pride,
Dar'd to the combat ; in which our valiant Hamlet
(For so this side of our known world esteem'd him),
Did slay this Fortinbras ; who, by a seal'd compáct,
Well ratified by law and heraldry,
Did forfeit, with his life, all those his lands,
Which he stood seiz'd of^a, to the conqueror :
Against the which, a moiety competent
Was gaged by our king : which had return'd
To the inheritance of Fortinbras,

¹¹ To impress signifies only to retain shipwrights by giving them prest money for holding themselves in readiness to be employed. Thus in Chapman's second book of Homer's Odyssey :—

“ I from the people straight will press for you, Free voluntaries.”

See King Lear, Act iv. Sc. 2 ; and Blount's Glossography, in v. prest.

^a The folio has, “ Which he stood seiz'd on.” Moiety, in the next line, is a dissyllable.

Had he been vanquisher ; as, by the same co-mart¹²,
 And carriage of the article design'd¹³,
 His fell to Hamlet : Now, sir, young Fortinbras,
 Of inapproved mettle hot and full¹⁴,
 Hath in the skirts of Norway, here and there,
 Shark'd¹⁵ up a list of lawless¹⁶ resolute,
 For food and diet, to some enterprise
 That hath a stomach in't : which is no other
 (As it doth well appear unto our state,)
 But to recover of us, by strong hand,
 And terms compulsative¹⁷, those 'foresaid lands
 So by his father lost : And this, I take it,
 Is the main motive of our preparations ;
 The source of this our watch ; and the chief head
 Of this post-haste and romage¹⁸ in the land.

¹⁹ [Ber. I think, it be no other, but e'en so :
 Well may it sort, that this portentous figure
 Comes armed through our watch ; so like the king
 That was, and is the question of these wars.

Hor. A mote it is, to trouble the mind's eye.

¹² Co-mart is the reading of the quarto of 1604 ; the folio reads cov'nant. Co-mart, it is presumed, means a joint bargain. No other instance of the word is known.

¹³ Carriage is purport, bearing. Designed is here used in the sense of designatus, Lat.

¹⁴ Thus the first quarto. The folio has, "Of unimproved mettle hot and full. The reading of the quarto seems preferable, as the idea excited by Young Fortinbras is of one animated by courage at full heat, but at present untried,—the ardour of inexperience.

¹⁵ i. e. snapped up or taken up hastily. "Scroccare is to shark or shift for ~~any~~ thing, to snap. The quarto 1603, instead of a list has a sight.

¹⁶ All the quartos have lawless. The folio landless.

¹⁷ The quartos have compulsatory.

¹⁸ Romage, now spelt rummage, and in common use as a verb, though not as a substantive, for making a thorough ransack or search, a busy and tumultuous movement.

¹⁹ All the lines within crotchets in this play are omitted in the folio of 1623. The title-pages of the quartos of 1604 and 1605 declare this play to be "enlarged to almost as much againe as it was, according to the true and perfect copie."

In the most high and palmy state of Rome,
 A little ere the mightiest Julius fell,
 The graves stood tenantless, and the sheeted dead
 Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets²⁰ ;
 As, stars with trains of fire and dews of blood,
 Disasters in the sun ; and the moist star²¹,
 Upon whose influence Neptune's empire stands,
 Was sick almost to doomsday with eclipse.
 And even the like precurse of fierce events,—
 As harbingers preceding still the fates,
 And prologue to the omen²² coming on,
 Have heaven and earth together demonstrated
 Unto our climatures and countrymen.—]

Re-enter Ghost.

But, soft ; behold ! lo, where it comes again !
 I'll cross it, though it blast me²³.—Stay, illusion^a !

²⁰ There is evidently some corruption of the text here. It has been conjectured that a line has been omitted, and perhaps we might read :—

“ The sheeted dead
 Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets ;
 And as the earth, so portents fill'd the sky,
 Asters, with trains of fire and dews of blood,
 Disasters in the sun, &c.”

The poet uses disaster as a verb in the following passage in Antony and Cleopatra, Act ii. Sc. 7 :—“ To be called into a huge sphere, and not to be seen to move in it, are the holes where eyes should be, which pitifully disaster the cheeks.” It has therefore been conjectured that we should read disastering here.

²¹ The moist star, i. e. the moon.

“ Not that night-wand'ring pale and watry star.”

Marlowe's Hero and Leander.

²³ The person who crossed the spot on which a spectre was seen became subject to its malignant influence. Among the reasons for supposing the death of Ferdinand, Earl of Derby, (who died young, in 1594,) to have been occasioned by witchcraft, is the following :—“ On Friday there appeared a tall man, who twice crossed him swiftly ; and when the earl came to the place where he saw this man he fell sick.”—Lodge's Illustrations of English History, vol. iii. p. 48.

^a The quartos have here a stage direction : “ It spreads his arms.”

If thou hast any sound, or use of voice,
Speak to me :

If there be any good thing to be done,
That may to thee do ease, and grace to me,
Speak to me :

If thou art privy to thy country's fate,
Which, happily, foreknowing, may avoid,
O, speak !

Or, if thou hast uphoarded in thy life
Extorted treasure in the womb of earth,
For which, they say, you spirits oft walk in death,

[Cock crows.

Speak of it :—stay, and speak.—Stop it, Marcellus.

Mar. Shall I strike at it with my partizan ?

Hor. Do, if it will not stand.

Ber. 'Tis here !

Hor. 'Tis here ! [Exit Ghost.

Mar. 'Tis gone !

We do it wrong, being so majestical,
To offer it the show of violence ;
For it is, as the air, invulnerable²⁴,
And our vain blows malicious mockery.

Ber. It was about to speak, when the cock crew.

Hor. And then it started like a guilty thing
Upon a fearful summons. I have heard,
The cock, that is the trumpet to the morn²⁵,
Doth with his lofty and shrill-sounding throat
Awake the god of day ; and at his warning,

²⁴ Thus in Macbeth :—

“ As easy may'st thou the intrenchant air
With thy keen sword impress.”

And in King John :—

“ Against the invulnerable clouds of heaven.”

²⁵ The folio has day instead of morn, which is the reading of the quartos.

“ And now the cocke, the morning's trumpeter, Play'd hunts-up for the day-star to appear.”

Drayton.

Whether in sea or fire, in earth or air,
 The extravagant and erring²⁶ spirit hies
 To his confine; and of the truth herein
 This present object made probation.

Mar. It faded on the crowing of the cock²⁷.
 Some say, that ever 'gainst that season comes Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,
 This bird of dawning singeth all night long:
 And then they say no spirit can walk²⁸ abroad;
 The nights are wholesome: then no planets strike,
 No fairy takes²⁹, nor witch hath power to charm,
 So hallow'd and so gracious³⁰ is the time.

²⁶ The extravagant and erring spirit. "Extra-vagans, wandering about, going beyond bounds." Thus in Othello:—

"To an extravagant and wheeling stranger."

It is remarkable that stravagant is the reading of the first quarto, which Steevens points out as used in the sense of vagrant. "They took me up for a stravagant." This is the "stravagare" of the Italians; "to wander, to gad, or stray beyond or out of the way." Thus in A Midsummer Night's Dream:—

"And yonder shines Aurora's harbinger,
 At whose approach, ghosts wandering here and there
 Troop home."

Erring is erraticus, straying or roving up and down. Mr. Douce has justly observed that "the epithets extravagant and erring are highly poetical and appropriate, and seem to prove that Shakespeare was well acquainted with the Latin language."

²⁷ This is a very ancient superstition. Philostratus, giving an account of the apparition of Achilles' shade to Apollonius of Tyana, says, "that it vanished with a little gleam as soon as the cock crowed." There is a Hymn of Prudentius, and another of St. Ambrose, in which it is mentioned; and there are some lines in the latter very much resembling Horatio's speech. Mr. Douce has given them in his Illustrations of Shakespeare.

²⁸ Thus the folio. The quartos have, dares stir, except that of 1603, which has, dare walk.

²⁹ i. e. No fairy blasts, or strikes. Palsgrave has "Taken, as children's limbs be by the fairies, Faée." Thus in the Merry Wives of Windsor, Act iv. Sc. 4:—

"And there he blasts the tree and takes the cattle."

See note on that passage.

³⁰ It has already been observed that gracious is sometimes used

Hor. So have I heard, and do in part believe it.
 But, look, the morn³¹, in russet mantle clad,
 Walks o'er the dew of yon high eastern hill :
 Break we our watch up ; and, by my advice,
 Let us impart what we have seen to-night
 Unto young Hamlet : for, upon my life,
 This spirit, dumb to us, will speak to him :
 Do you consent we shall acquaint him with it,
 As needful in our loves, fitting our duty ?

Mar. Let's do't, I pray ; and I this morning know
 Where we shall find him most conveniently³². [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. A Room of State in the same.

Enter the King, Queen, HAMLET, POLONIUS, LA-ERTES, VOLTIMAND, CORNELIUS, Lords, and Attendants.

King. Though yet of Hamlet our dear brother's death

The memory be green : and that it us befitted
 To bear our hearts in grief, and our whole kingdom
 To be contracted in one brow of woe ;
 Yet so far hath discretion fought with nature,
 That we with wisest sorrow think on him,
 Together with remembrance of ourselves.
 Therefore our sometime sister, now our queen,
 The imperial jointress of this warlike state,
 Have we, as 'twere with a defeated joy,—
 With one auspicious, and one dropping eye¹ ;
 With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage, by Shakespeare for graced, favoured. Vide note on As You Like It, Act i. Sc. 2.

³¹ The first quarto has sun.

³² The quarto has "most convenient."

In equal scale weighing delight and dole,
 Taken to wife : nor have we herein barr'd
 Your better wisdoms, which have freely gone
 With this affair along :—For all, our thanks.

Now follows, that you know, young Fortinbras,
 Holding a weak supposal of our worth ;
 Or thinking, by our late dear brother's death,
 Our state to be disjoint and out of frame,
 Collegued with this dream of his advantage,
 He hath not fail'd to pester us with message,
 Importing the surrender of those lands
 Lost by his father, with all bonds² of law,
 To our most valiant brother.—So much for him.
 Now for ourself, and for this time of meeting
 Thus much the business is : We have here writ
 To Norway, uncle of young Fortinbras,—
 Who, impotent and bed-rid, scarcely hears
 Of this his nephew's purpose,—to suppress
 His further gait³ herein ; in that the levies,
 The lists, and full proportions, are all made
 Out of his subject :—and we here despatch
 You, good Cornelius, and you, Voltimand,
 For bearers⁴ of this greeting to old Norway ;
 Giving to you no further personal power
 To business with the king, more than the scope
 Of these dilated articles allow⁵.

“ With an auspicious and a dropping eye.”

The same thought occurs in The Winter's Tale :—“ She had one eye declined for the loss of her husband, another elevated that the oracle was fulfilled.” There is an old proverbial phrase, “ To laugh with one eye, and cry with the other.”

² The quarto reads, bands ; but bands and bonds signified the same thing in the poet's time.

³ Gait here signifies course, progress. The old copies spell it gate. Gait for road, way, path, is still in use in the north. We have this word again in A Midsummer Night's Dream, Act v. Sc. 2 :—

“ Every fairy takes his gait.”

⁴ Thus the quartos. The folio has, For bearing.

⁵ Malone says, “ the poet should have written allows ;” but the Farewell; and let your haste commend your duty.

Cor. Vol. In that, and all things, will we show our duty.

King. We doubt it nothing; heartily farewell.

[Exeunt VOLTIMAND and CORNELIUS.]

And now, Laertes, what's the news with you?

You told us of some suit; what is't, Laertes?

You cannot speak of reason to the Dane,

And lose your voice: What would'st thou beg, Laertes,

That shall not be my offer, not thy asking?

The head is not more native to the heart,

The hand more instrumental to the mouth,

Than is the throne of Denmark to thy father⁶.

What would'st thou have, Laertes?

Laer.

My dread lord⁷,

Your leave and favour to return to France;

From whence though willingly I came to Denmark,

To show my duty in your coronation;

Yet now, I must confess, that duty done,

My thoughts and wishes bend again toward France,

And bow them to your gracious leave and pardon.

King. Have you your father's leave? What says Polonius?

grammar and practice of Shakespeare's age was not strict in the concordance of plural and singular in noun and verb; and numerous examples might be adduced from his cotemporaries to prove this. The question is, Are the writers of that time to be tried by modern rules of grammar, with which they were not acquainted? The first quarto reads:—

“No further personal power
To business with the king
Than those related articles do shew.”

⁶ The various parts of the body enumerated are not more allied, more necessary to each other, than the throne of Denmark, i. e. the king, is bound to your father to do him service. But it is most probable that Shakespeare wrote—

Than to the throne of Denmark is thy father

⁷ The folio has, Dread my lord.

Pol. He hath, my lord, [wrung from me my slow leave,

By laboursome petition ; and, at last,
Upon his will I seal'd my hard consent :]
I do beseech you, give him leave to go.

King. Take thy fair hour, Laertes ; time be thine,
And thy best graces spend it at thy will⁸.—
But now, my cousin Hamlet, and my son,—

Ham. A little more than kin, and less than kind⁹.
[Aside.

King. How is it that the clouds still hang on you ?

Ham. Not so, my lord, I am too much i' the sun¹⁰.

Queen. Good Hamlet, cast thy nighted colour off,
And let thine eye look like a friend on Denmark.
Do not, for ever, with thy vailed lids¹¹

⁸ In the first quarto this passage stands thus :—

“ King. With all our heart, Laertes, fare thee well.

Laert. I in all love and dutie take my leave. [Exit.”

The king's speech may be thus explained :—“ Take an auspicious hour, Laertes ; be thy time thine own, and thy best virtues guide thee in spending of it at thy will.” The editors had rendered this passage doubly obscure by erroneously placing a colon at graces.

⁹ A little more than kin, and less than kind. This passage has baffled the commentators, who are at issue about its meaning ; but none of them have rightly explained it. A cotemporary of the poet will lead us to its true meaning. A little more than kin has been rightly said to allude to the double relationship of the king to Hamlet, as uncle and step-father, his kindred by blood and kindred by marriage. By less than kind Hamlet means degenerate and base. “ Going out of kinde,” says Baret, “ which goeth out of kinde, which dothe or worketh dishonour to his kinred. Degener ; forlignant.”—ALVEARIE, K. 59. “ Forligner,” says Cotgrave, “ to degenerate, to grow out of kind, to differ in conditions with his ancestors.” That less than kind and out of kind have the same meaning, who can doubt ?

¹⁰ i. e. deprived of the charities of kindred. See note on Much Ado about Nothing, Act ii. Scene 1, note 22. It is probable that a quibble is intended between sun and son. i. e. “ I am titularly your son, by your marriage with my mother,—the more's the pity.” The old spelling is sonne.

¹¹ i. e. with eyes cast down. To vail is to lower.

Seek for thy noble father in the dust :
Thou know'st, 'tis common ; all that lives must die,
Passing through nature to eternity.

Ham. Ay, madam, it is common.

Queen. If it be,
Why seems it so particular with thee ?

Ham. Seems, madam ! nay, it is ; I know not seems.
'Tis not alone my inky cloak, good mother,
Nor customary suits of solemn black,
Nor windy suspiration of forc'd breath,
No, nor the fruitful river in the eye,
Nor the dejected haviour of the visage,
Together with all forms, modes, shows of grief,
That can denote me truly : These, indeed, seem,
For they are actions that a man might play ;
But I have that within which passeth show ;
'These, but the trappings and the suits of woe¹².

King. 'Tis sweet and commendable in your nature,
Hamlet,

To give these mourning duties to your father :
But you must know your father lost a father ;
That father lost, lost his ; and the survivor bound
In filial obligation, for some term
To do obsequious sorrow¹³. But to perséver
In obstinate condolment, is a course
Of impious stubbornness ; 'tis unmanly grief
It shows a will most incorrect to heaven ;
A heart unfortified, or mind impatient ;
An understanding simple and unschool'd :

¹² " My grief lies all within ;
And these external manners of lament
Are merely shadows to the unseen grief,
That swells with silence in the tortur'd soul."

King Richard II.

¹³ Obsequious sorrow is dutiful, observant sorrow. Shakespeare seems to have used this word generally with a feeling for the more general scope of the Latin derivative, even when he connects it with funeral rites.

For what, we know, must be, and is as common
 As any the most vulgar thing to sense,
 Why should we, in our peevish opposition,
 Take it to heart? Fye! 'tis a fault to heaven,
 A fault against the dead, a fault to nature,
 To reason most absurd; whose common theme
 Is death of fathers, and who still hath cried,
 From the first corse, till he that died to-day,
This must be so. We pray you, throw to earth
 This unprevailing¹⁴ woe; and think of us
 As of a father: for let the world take note,
 You are the most immediate to our throne;
 And with no less nobility of love¹⁵,
 Than that which dearest father bears his son,
 Do I impart toward you. For your intent
 In going back to school in Wittenberg,
 It is most retrograde to our desire:
 And, we beseech you, bend you to remain
 Here, in the cheer and comfort of our eye,
 Our chiefest courtier, cousin, and our son.

Queen. Let not thy mother lose her prayers, Hamlet;
 I pray thee, stay with us, go not to Wittenberg.

Ham. I shall in all my best obey you, madam.

King. Why, 'tis a loving and a fair reply;
 Be as ourself in Denmark.—Madam, come;
 This gentle and unforc'd accord of Hamlet
 Sits smiling to my heart: in grace whereof
 No jocund health that Denmark drinks to-day,

¹⁴ Unprevailing was used in the sense of unavailing as late as Dryden's time. "He may often prevail himself of the same advantages in English."—Essay on Dramatic Poetry, 1st ed.

"And dyvers noble victoryes, as the history doth express,
 That he atchyved to the honor of the town,
 Could not him prevayle whan Fortune lyst to frown."

Metrical Visions, by G. Cavendish, p. 81.

¹⁵ This was a common form of figurative expression. The Ghost, describing his affection for the Queen, says:—

"To me, whose love was of that dignity."

But the great cannon to the clouds shall tell ;
 And the king's rouse¹⁶ the heaven shall bruit again,
 Respeaking earthly thunder. Come away.

[Flourish. Exeunt King, Queen, Lords, &c.

POLONIUS, and LAERTES.

Ham. O, that this too too solid flesh would melt,
 Thaw, and resolve¹⁷ itself into a dew !
 Or that the Everlasting had not fix'd
 His canon¹⁸ 'gainst self-slaughter ! O God ! O God !
 How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable
 Seem to me all the uses of this world !
 Fye on't ! O fye ! 'tis an unweeded garden
 That grows to seed ; things rank, and gross in nature,
 Possess it merely¹⁹. That it should come to this !
 But two months dead !—nay, not so much, not two
 So excellent a king ; that was, to this,
 Hyperion²⁰ to a satyr : so loving to my mother,

¹⁶ The quarto of 1603 reads :—

“ The rowse the king shall drink unto the prince.”

A rouse appears to have been a deep draught to the health of any one, in which it was customary to empty the glass or vessel. Its etymology is uncertain ; but I suspect it to be only an abridgment of carouse, which is used in the same sense.—See Peacham's Complete Gentleman, 1627, p. 194.

Carouse seems to have come to us from the French, who again appear to have derived it from the German gar-auss, to drink all out : at least so we may judge from the following passage in Rabelais, B. iii. Prologue :—“ Enfans, beuvez a plein godets. Si bon ne vous semble, laissez le. Je ne suis de ces importuns lifrelafres, qui par force, par outrage, et violence contraignent les gentils compaignons trinquer, boire caraus, et allauz.”

The reader may consult Mr. Gifford's Massinger, vol. i. p. 240.

¹⁷ To resolve had anciently the same meaning as to dissolve. “ To thaw or resolve that which is frozen ; regelo.—The snow is resolved and melted. To till the ground, and resolve it into dust.” Cooper. This is another word in a Latin sense ; but it is not peculiar to Shakespeare.

¹⁸ The old copy reads, cannon ; but this was the old spelling of canon, a law or decree.

¹⁹ i. e. absolutely, solely, wholly. Mere, Lat.

²⁰ Hyperion, or Apollo, always represented as a model of beauty,

That he might not beteem²¹ the winds of heaven
 Visit her face too roughly. Heaven and earth!
 Must I remember? why, she would hang on him,
 As if increase of appetite had grown
 By what it fed on: And yet, within a month! —
 Let me not think on't; — Frailty, thy name is woman! —

A little month; or ere those shoes were old,
 With which she follow'd my poor father's body,
 Like Niobe, all tears; — why she, even she, —
 O heaven! a beast, that wants discourse of reason²², as the Satyr personified lust. Shakespeare has been followed by the learned Gray in the accentuation of this name: —

“Hyperion's march and glittering shafts of war.”

Sir William Alexander and Drummond have accented it properly, Hypērion.

²¹ Beteem, i. e. to allow, to vouchsafe. This word being of uncommon occurrence, it was changed to permit by Rowe; and to let e'en by Theobald. Steevens had the merit of pointing out the passage in Golding's Ovid, which settles its meaning: —

“Yet could he not beteeme

The shape of any other bird than egle for to seeme.

“Nulla tamen alite verti

Dignatur, nisi quæ possit sua fulmine ferre.”

The etymology has been mistaken by Steevens. It is from the A. S. ge-teman, to warrantize; and hence to allow, to vouchsafe. The word occurs again in A Midsummer Night's Dream, Act i. Sc. 2, in the same sense, and not in a different one, as Mr. Collier imagines. See vol. ii. p. 312, note 10.

²² Oh heaven! a beast that wants discourse of reason. Mr. Gifford, not comprehending this, in a note on Massinger, vol. i. p. 149, thinks we should read, “discourse and reason.” But “discourse of reason” was the phraseology of Shakespeare's time; and the poet again uses the same language in Troilus and Cressida, Act ii. Sc. 2: —

“Is your blood

So madly hot, that no discourse of reason—

Can qualify the same?”

In the language of the schools, “Discourse is that rational act of the mind by which we deduce or infer one thing from another.” Discourse of reason therefore means ratiocination. Brutes have not this reasoning faculty, though they have what has been called instinct and memory. Hamlet opposes the discursive power of

Would have mourn'd longer,—married with mine uncle,
My father's brother ; but no more like my father,
Than I to Hercules : Within a month ;
Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears
Had left the flushing in her galled eyes,
She married :—O most wicked speed, to post
With such dexterity to incestuous sheets !
It is not, nor it cannot come to, good ;
But break, my heart : for I must hold my tongue !

Enter HORATIO, BERNARDO, and MARCELLUS.

Hor. Hail to your lordship !

Ham. I am glad to see you well ;
Horatio,—or I do forget myself.

Hor. The same, my lord, and your poor servant ever.

Ham. Sir, my good friend ; I'll change that name with you.

And what make you²³ from Wittenberg, Horatio?— Marcellus ?

Mar. My good lord,——

Ham. I am very glad to see you ; good even, sir.—
But what, in faith, make you from Wittenberg ?

Hor. A truant disposition, good my lord.

Ham. I would not have²⁴ your enemy say so :

the intellect of men to the instinct of brutes in Act iv. Sc. 4. Hobbes, in his Treatise of Human Nature, was the first to perceive the error into which the use of discourse might lead, and he therefore changes it :—“ Because the word discourse is commonly taken for the coherence and consequence of words, I will, to avoid equivocation, call it discursion.” The first quarto reads, “ a beast devoid of reason.” We have discourse of thought, for the discursive range of thought, in Othello, Act iv. Sc. 2.

²³ What make you, i. e. what do you. Vide note on Love's Labour's Lost, Act iv. Sc. 3.

²⁴ The quartos have, “ I would not hear,” which has evidently been changed to have in the folio, to avoid the disagreeable clash with ear in the next line.

Nor shall you do mine ear that violence,
To make it truster of your own report
Against yourself: I know you are no truant.
But what is your affair in Elsinore?

We'll teach you to drink deep ere you depart.

Hor. My lord, I came to see your father's funeral.

Ham. I pray thee, do not mock me, fellow student;
I think, it was to see my mother's wedding.

Hor. Indeed, my lord, it follow'd hard upon.

Ham. Thrift, thrift, Horatio! the funeral bak'd meats²⁵

Did coldly furnish forth the marriage tables.
'Would, I had met my dearest²⁶ foe in heaven
Ere²⁷ ever I had seen that day, Horatio!
My father,—Methinks, I see my father.

Hor.

O, where,

My lord?

Ham. In my mind's eye²⁸, Horatio.

Hor. I saw him once; he was a goodly king.

Ham. He was a man, take him for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again.

²⁵ It was anciently the custom to give an entertainment at a funeral. The usage was derived from the Roman cæna funeralis; and is not yet disused in the North, where it is called an arvel supper.

²⁶ See note on Twelfth Night, Act v. Sc. 1, p. 437.

²⁷ This is the reading of the quarto of 1603. The folio reads, "Ere I had ever." The later quartos "Or ever."

²⁸ "Himself behind

Was left unseen, save to the eye of mind."

Rape of Lucrece.

Chaucer has the expression in his Man of Lawe's Tale:—

"But it were with thilke eyen of his mind,

Which men mowen see whan they ben blinde."

And Ben Jonson, in his Masque of Love's Triumphs:—

"As only by the mind's eye may be seen."

And Richard Rolle, in his Speculum Vitæ, MS. speaking of Jacob's Dream:—

"That Jacob sawe with gostly eye."

i. e. the eye of the mind or spirit.

Hor. My lord, I think I saw him yesternight.

Ham. Saw who?

Hor. My lord, the king your father.

Ham. The king my father!

Hor. Season your admiration for a while
With an attent ear; till I may deliver,
Upon the witness of these gentlemen,
This marvel to you.

Ham. For God's love let me hear!

Hor. Two nights together had these gentlemen,
Marcellus and Bernardo, on their watch,
In the dead vast and middle of the night²⁹,
Been thus encounter'd. A figure like your father,
Armed at all points, exactly, cap-à-pé,
Appears before them, and, with solemn march,
Goes slow and stately by them: thrice he walk'd
By their oppress'd and fear-surprised eyes,
Within his truncheon's length; whilst they, distill'd³⁰
Almost to jelly with the act of fear,
Stand dumb, and speak not to him. This to me
In dreadful secrecy impart they did;
And I with them, the third night kept the watch;

²⁹ Thus the quarto 1603. The quarto, 1604, has:—

“In the dead waste and middle of the night.”

I suffer the following note to stand as I had written it previous to the discovery of the earlier copy.

We have “that vast of night” in The Tempest, Act i. Sc. 2. Shakespeare has been unjustly accused of intending a quibble here between waist and waste. There appears to me nothing incongruous in the expression; on the contrary, by “the dead waste and middle of the night,” I think, we have a forcible image of the void stillness of midnight.

³⁰ Thus all the quartos. The folio reads bestill'd. As Mr. Collier's corrector has wantonly substituted bechill'd, and that gentleman says, neither of the old readings is satisfactory, it becomes necessary to show that distill'd for meltd or dissolved was at least familiar to the poet's time. Thus in Sylvester's Du Bartas, 4th Ed. 4to. p. 764:—

“Melt thee, distill thee, turne to waxe or snowe,
Make sad thy gesture, tune thy voice to woe.”

Where, as they had deliver'd, both in time,
 Form of the thing, each word made true and good,
 The apparition comes : I knew your father ;
 These hands are not more like.

Ham. But where was this ?

Hor. My lord, upon the platform where we watch'd.

Ham. Did you not speak to it ?

Hor. My lord, I did :

But answer made it none : yet once, methought,
 It lifted up its head³¹, and did address
 Itself to motion, like as it would speak ;
 But, even then, the morning cock crew loud ;
 And at the sound it shrunk in haste away,
 And vanish'd from our sight.

Ham. 'Tis very strange.

Hor. As I do live, my honour'd lord, 'tis true ;
 And we did think it writ down in our duty,
 To let you know of it.

Ham. Indeed, indeed, sirs, but this troubles me.
 Hold you the watch to-night ?

All. We do, my lord.

Ham. Arm'd, say you ?

All. Arm'd, my lord.

Ham. From top to toe ?

All. My lord, from head to foot.

Ham. Then saw you not his face ?

Hor. O, yes, my lord ; he wore his beaver³² up.

Ham. What, look'd he frowningly ?

³¹ It seems that spectres were supposed to maintain an obdurate silence till interrogated by the persons to whom they made their especial appearance. The moment of the evanescence of spirits was supposed to be limited to the crowing of the cock. This belief is very ancient. See Prudentius Cathem. Hym. i. v. 40, and the various comments on that passage.

The first and second folios, and some of the quartos, have "it head." The possessive neutral pronoun its not being then common. The quarto, 1603, has his head. The third folio its.

³² That part of the helmet which may be lifted up. Mr Douce

Hor. A countenance more
In sorrow than in anger.

Ham. Pale, or red?

Hor. Nay, very pale.

Ham. And fix'd his eyes upon you?

Hor. Most constantly.

Ham. I would I had been there.

Hor. It would have much amaz'd you.

Ham. Very like, very like: Stay'd it long?

Hor. While one with moderate haste might tell a hundred.

Mar. Ber. Longer, longer.

Hor. Not when I saw it.

Ham. His beard was grizzl'd³³? no?

Hor. It was, as I have seen it in his life,
A sable silver'd³⁴.

Ham. I'll watch to-night;
Perchance, 'twill walk again.

Hor. I warrant you, it will.

Ham. If it assume my noble father's person,
I'll speak to it, though hell itself should gape,
And bid me hold my peace. I pray you all,
If you have hitherto conceal'd this sight,
Let it be tenable³⁵ in your silence still;
And whatsoever else shall hap to-night,
Give it an understanding, but no tongue;
I will requite your loves. So, fare you well:
Upon the platform, 'twixt eleven and twelve,
I'll visit you.

All. Our duty to your honour.

has given representations of the beaver, and other parts of a helmet, and fully explained them in his Illustrations, vol. i. p. 443.

³³ Thus the quartos. The folio has grisy.

³⁴ "And sable curls all silvered o'er with white."

Shakespeare's Twelfth Sonnet.

³⁵ The quarto of 1603 reads tenible. The other quartos tenable. The folio of 1623 treble.

Ham. Your loves, as mine to you : Farewell.

[Exeunt HORATIO, MARCELLUS, and BERNARDO.

My father's spirit in arms ! all is not well ;
I doubt some foul play : 'would the night were come !
Till then sit still, my soul : Foul deeds will rise,
Though all the earth o'erwhelm them, to men's eyes.
[Exit.

SCENE III. A Room in Polonius' House

Enter LAERTES and OPHELIA.

Laer. My necessaries are embark'd ; Farewell :
And, sister, as the winds give benefit,
And convoy is assistant, do not sleep,
But let me hear from you.

Oph. Do you doubt that ?

Laer. For Hamlet, and the trifling of his favour,
Hold it a fashion, and a toy in blood ;
A violet in the youth of primy nature,
Forward, not permanent, sweet, not lasting,
The perfume and suppliance of a minute¹ ;
No more.

Oph. No more but so ?

Laer. Think it no more :
For nature, crescent, does not grow alone
In thews², and bulk ; but, as this temple waxes,
The inward service of the mind and soul

¹ This is the reading of the quarto copy. The folio has:—

“ Sweet, not lasting,

The suppliance of a minute.”

It is plain that perfume is necessary to exemplify the idea of sweet not lasting. “ The suppliance of a minute” should seem to mean supplying or enduring only that short space of time as transitory and evanescent. The simile is eminently beautiful.

² Thews, i. e. sinews and muscular strength. Vide note on the Second Part of King Henry IV. Act iii. Sc. 2.

Grows wide withal. Perhaps, he loves you now ;
 And now no soil, nor cautel³ doth besmirch⁴
 The virtue of his will⁵: but, you must fear,
 His greatness weigh'd, his will is not his own ;
 For he himself is subject to his birth :
 He may not, as unvalued persons do,
 Carve for himself ; for on his choice depends
 The safety and health of the whole state⁶ ;
 And therefore must his choice be circumscribed
 Unto the voice and yielding of that body,
 Whereof he is the head. Then if he says he loves you,
 It fits your wisdom so far to believe it,
 As he in his particular act and place⁷
 May give his saying deed ; which is no further,
 Than the main voice of Denmark goes withal.
 Then weigh what loss your honour may sustain,
 If with too credent ear you list his songs ;
 Or lose your heart ; or your chaste treasure open
 To his unmaster'd importunity.
 Fear it, Ophelia, fear it, my dear sister ;

³ Cautel is cautious circumspection, subtlety, or deceit. Minsheu explains it, "a crafty way to deceive." Thus in a Lover's Complaint:—

"In him a plenitude of subtle matter, Applied to cautels, all strange forms receives."

And in Coriolanus:—

"Be caught by cautelous baits and practice."

"The virtue of his will" means his virtuous intentions.

⁴ Besmirch is besmear, or sully.

⁵ The folio erroneously prints fear instead of will which is found in all the quartos.

⁶ The safety and health of the whole state. Thus the quarto of 1604. In the folio it is altered to "The sanctity," &c. but the passage is there very incorrectly printed, and sanctity is probably an error for sanity. Safety is used as a trisyllable by Spenser and others. Thus Hall in his first Satire, b. iii.—

"Nor fish can dive so deep in yielding sea, Though Thetis self should swear her safety."

⁷ So the quarto, 1604. The folio reads "peculiar sect and force."

And keep you in^a the rear of your affection,
 Out of the shot and danger of desire.
 The chariest^b maid is prodigal enough,
 If she unmask her beauty to the moon :
 Virtue itself scapes not calumnious strokes :
 The canker galls the infants of the spring,
 Too oft before their buttons be disclos'd ;
 And in the morn and liquid dew of youth
 Contagious blastments are most imminent.
 Be wary then : best safety lies in fear ;
 Youth to itself rebels, though none else near.

Oph. I shall th' effect of this good lesson keep,
 As watchman to my heart ; But, good my brother,
 Do not, as some ungracious pastors do,
 Show me the steep and thorny way to heaven ;
 Whilst, like a puff'd and reckless libertine,
 Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads,
 And recks not his own rede⁹.

Laer. O fear me not.
 I stay too long ;—But here my father comes.

Enter POLONIUS.

A double blessing is a double grace ;
 Occasion smiles upon a second leave.

Pol. Yet here, Laertes! aboard, aboard, for shame!
 The wind sits in the shoulder of your sail,
 And you are stay'd for: There, my blessing with you ;
 [Laying his Hand on LAERTES' Head.]

^a Thus the quartos. The folio has "Keep within."

^b i. e. the most cautious, the most discreet. In Greene's Never too Late, 1616:—"Love requires not chastity, but that her soldiers be chary." And again:—"She lives chastly enough that lives charily." We have chariness in the Merry Wives of Windsor; and unchary in Twelfth Night, Act iii. Sc. 4.

⁹ i. e. regards not his own counsel. In The Two Angry Women of Abington, 1599, we have:—"Take heed, is a good reed." And in Sternhold, Psaim i.—

"Blest is the man that hath not lent
 To wicked rede his ear."

And these few precepts in thy memory
 Look thou charáctér¹⁰. Give thy thoughts no tongue,
 Nor any unproportion'd thought his act.
 Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar.
 The friends thou hast, and their adoption tried,
 Grapple them to thy soul with hooks of steel¹¹;
 But do not dull thy palm¹² with entertainment
 Of each new hatch'd, unfledg'd comrade. Beware
 Of entrance to a quarrel: but, being in,
 Bear't that th'opposed may beware of thee.
 Give every man thine ear, but few thy voice:
 Take each man's censure¹³, but reserve thy judgement.
 Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
 But not express'd in fancy; rich, not gaudy:
 For the apparel oft proclaims the man:
 And they in France, of the best rank and station,
 Are most select and generous; chief¹⁴ in that.

¹⁰ i. e. mark, imprint, strongly infix. In Shakespeare's 122nd Sonnet:—

“Thy tables are within my brain
 Full character'd with lasting memory.”

And in The Two Gentlemen of Verona:—

“I do conjure thee,
 Who art the table wherein all my thoughts
 Are visibly character'd and engraved.”

¹¹ The old copies read, “with hoops of steel;” but it is quite evident that it is a misprint for hooks, as the word grapple shows. Grappling-hooks is a familiar term, but who ever heard of grappling with hoops of steel! Yet this judicious correction by Malone has been called unwarrantable.

¹² But do not dull thy palm. This figurative expression means “do not blunt thy feeling by taking every new acquaintance by the hand, or by admitting him to the intimacy of a friend.”

¹³ i. e. opinion; censura, Lat. Thus in King Henry VI. Part II.—

¹⁴ The folio has:—

“Are of a most select and generous cheff, in that.”

The quartos have cheefe. The line is so rugged and redundant with the words of a, and the sense so palpably obscure that I feel assured it is corrupt, and that they should be omitted. The sense will then be: “They in France of the best rank and station, are most select and noble, chiefly in that.” Chief being used adver-

Neither a borrower, nor a lender be :
 For loan oft loses both itself and friend ;
 And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry.
 This above all,—To thine ownself be true ;
 And it must follow, as the night the day,
 Thou canst not then be false to any man.
 Farewell ; my blessing season¹⁵ this in thee !

Laer. Most humbly do I take my leave, my lord.

Pol. The time invites you ; go, your servants tend.

Laer. Farewell, Ophelia ; and remember well

What I have said to you.

Oph. 'Tis in my memory lock'd,
 And you yourself shall keep the key of it.

Laer. Farewell. [Exit LAERTES.

Pol. What is't, Ophelia, he hath said to you ?

Oph. So please you, something touching the lord
 Hamlet.

Pol. Marry, well bethought :

'Tis told me, he hath very oft of late
 Given private time to you ; and you yourself
 Have of your audience been most free and bounteous :
 If it be so (as so 'tis put on me,
 And that in way of caution), I must tell you,
 You do not understand yourself so clearly,
 As it behoves my daughter, and your honour :
 What is between you ? give me up the truth.

Oph. He hath, my lord, of late, made many tenders
 Of his affection to me.

bially, and generous in its then familiar sense of noble or gentleman-like. See Florio in v. Generoso.

¹⁵ "To season, for to infuse," says Warburton. "It is more than to infuse, it is to infix in such a manner that it may never wear out," says Johnson. But hear one of the poet's cotemporaries:—"To season, to temper wisely, to make more pleasant and acceptable."—Baret. Thus in Act ii. Sc. 1, Polonius says to Reynaldo, "You may season it in the charge." And in a former scene Horatio says:—

"Season your admiration for a while."

Pol. Affection? puh! you speak like a green girl, Unsifted¹⁶ in such perilous circumstance.

Do you believe his tenders, as you call them?

Oph. I do not know, my lord, what I should think

Pol. Marry, I'll teach you: think yourself a baby; That you have ta'en these tenders for true pay, Which are not sterling. Tender yourself more dearly; Or (not to crack the wind of the poor phrase, Wronging it thus) you'll tender me a fool¹⁷.

Oph. My lord, he hath impórtun'd me with love, In honourable fashion.

Pol. Ay, fashion you may call it; go to, go to.

Oph. And hath given countenance to his speech, my lord, With all the vows of heaven¹⁸.

Pol. Ay, springes to catch woodcocks¹⁹. I do know,

When the blood burns, how prodigal the soul Lends the tongue vows²⁰: these blazes, daughter, Giving more light than heat,—extinct in both, Even in their promise, as it is a making,— You must not take for fire. From this time, Be somewhat scanter of your maiden presence;

¹⁶ Unsifted, i. e. untried, inexperienced.

¹⁷ Shakespeare makes Polonius play on the equivocal use of the word tender, which was anciently used in the sense of regard or respect, as well as in that of offer. The folio reads “roaming it thus;” and the quarto, “wrong it thus.”

¹⁸ Thus the folio. The quartos:—

“With almost all the holy vows of heaven.”

¹⁹ This was a proverbial phrase. There is a collection of epigrams under that title: the woodcock being accounted a witless bird, from a vulgar notion that it had no brains. Springes to catch woodcocks means arts to entrap simplicity.

²⁰ Thus the quartos. The folio has “Gives the tongue vows.” The quarto, 1603:—

“How prodigal the tongue lends the heart vows.”

A few lines lower the folio repeats daughter after “From this time” at the end of the line, and misprints For instead of From.

Set your entreatments²¹ at a higher rate,
 Than a command to parley. For lord Hamlet,
 Believe so much in him, That he is young ;
 And with a larger tether²² may he walk,
 Than may be given you. In few, Ophelia,
 Do not believe his vows : for they are brokers²³,
 Not of that die which their investments show,
 But mere implorators of unholy suits,
 Breathing like sanctified and pious bawds²⁴,
 The better to beguile. This is for all,—
 I would not, in plain terms, from this time forth,
 Have you so slander any moment's leisure,
 As to give words or talk with the Lord Hamlet.
 Look to't, I charge you ; come your ways.

Oph. I shall obey, my lord. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. The Platform.

Enter HAMLET, HORATIO, and MARCELLUS.

Ham. The air bites shrewdly ; it is very cold¹.

Hor. It is a nipping and an eager² air.

Ham. What hour now ?

Hor. I think it lacks of twelve.

²¹ i. e. "be more difficult of access, and let the suits to you for that purpose be of higher respect, than a command to parley."

²² Figuratively, with more license.

²³ i. e. panders. The words brokage and broker were merely applied to love transactions, as they were to any other that took place by deputy. Words and vows being here spoken of as go-betweens, though delivered in person. Thus in A Lover's Complaint :—

"Know vows are ever brokers to defiling."

²⁴ The old copy has "pious bonds," which, although Mr. Collier retains it, is nonsense. Theobald gave the reading I adopt, which the context shows to be the true one.

¹ The folio absurdly prints, is it very cold? which Mr. Knight retains and defends.

² Eager was used in the sense of the French aigre, sharp.

Mar. No, it is struck.

Hor. Indeed? I heard it not; it then draws near the season,

Wherein the spirit held his wont to walk.

[A Flourish of Trumpets, and Ordnance shot off within.]

What does this mean, my lord?

Ham. The king doth wake to-night, and takes his rouse³,

Keeps wassel, and the swaggering up-spring⁴ reels;
And, as he drains his draughts of Rhenish down,
The kettledrum and trumpet thus bray out
The triumph of his pledge.

Hor. Is it a custom?

Ham. Ay, marry, is't:

But to my mind,—though I am native here,
And to the manner born,—it is a custom
More honour'd in the breach, than the observance.
[This heavy-headed revel, east and west⁵,
Makes us traduc'd, and tax'd of other nations:
They clepe⁶ us drunkards, and with swinish phrase

³ Wake here evidently signifies a late revel. A wake originally was a nightly festival kept on the day of dedication of a church, vigilia: hence it came to signify any other night festival. To wake signified to revel at night. Vide Florio in voce Veggia. For rouse see note, p. 142, ante. To keep wassel was to devote the time to festivity. Vide Love's Labour's Lost, Act v. Sc. 2.

⁴ I take upspring here to mean nothing more than upstart. Steevens, from a passage in Chapman's Alphonsus, thought that it might mean a dance.

⁵ This and the following twenty-one lines are omitted in the folio. They had probably been omitted in representation, lest they should give offence to Anne of Denmark.

⁶ Clepe, call; clypian, Sax. The Danes were indeed proverbial as drunkards, and well they might be, according to the accounts of the time. "A lively French traveller, being asked what he had seen in Denmark, replied, 'Rien de singulier sinon qu'on y chante tous les jours le Roi boit,' alluding to the French mode of celebrating Twelfth Day." Soil our addition⁷; and, indeed it takes
 From our achievements, though perform'd at height,
 The pith and marrow of our attribute.
 So, oft it chances in particular men,
 That, for some vicious mole of nature in them,
 As, in their birth (wherein they are not guilty,
 Since nature cannot choose his origin),
 By the o'ergrowth of some complexion⁸,
 Oft breaking down the pales and forts of reason;
 Or by some habit, that too much o'erleavens
 The form of plausible manners;—that these men,—
 Carrying, I say, the stamp of one defect;
 Being nature's livery, or fortune's star⁹,—
 Their virtues else (be they as pure as grace,
 As infinite as man may undergo,)
 Shall in the general censure take corruption
 From that particular fault: The dram of base
 Doth all the noble substance of a doubt¹⁰,
 To his own scandal.]

ard Opened, &c. 1635, 4to. speaking of what he calls the vinosity of nations, says of the Danes, that they have made a profession thereof from antiquity, and are the first upon record that brought their wassel bowls and elbowe deepe healthes into this land."—Douce. Roger Ascham, in one of his Letters, says, "The Emperor of Germany, who had his head in the glass five times as long as any of us, never drank less than a good quart at once of Rhenish wine." See also Howel's Letters, 8vo. 1726, p. 236. Muffet's Health's Improvement, 4to. 1635, p. 294. Harington's Nugæ Antiquæ, 8vo. 1804, vol. i. p. 349.

⁷ Soil our addition, i. e. characterize us by a swinish epithet.

⁸ Complexion for humour. By complexion our ancestors understood the constitutions or affections of the body. The quartos have, "their o'ergrowth."

⁹ Fortune's star, has been thought to refer to the influence of the planet supposed to govern our birth, &c. But it may be questioned whether we should not read fortune's scar. In the next line the quarto has, "their virtues."

¹⁰ The quarto of 1604, reads:—

"The dram of eale

Doth all the noble substance of a doubt."

The quarto of 1611 has eafe instead of eale. It seems to me most probable that Shakespeare wrote:—

Enter Ghost.

Hor. Look, my lord, it comes!

Ham. Angels and ministers of grace, defend us¹¹!—
Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn'd¹²,
Bring with thee airs from heaven, or blasts from hell,
Be thy intents wicked, or charitable,
Thou com'st in such a questionable¹³ shape,
That I will speak to thee. I'll call thee, Hamlet,
King, father, royal Dane: O! answer me:

“Doth all the noble substance oft adoubt—”

Using the word adoubt for doubt in its active sense of to bring into doubt or suspicion. We have numerous old words of similar form, and in Latin the verb dubito is written addubito, by Cicero and others. It is evident that dout could not have been the poet's word, for the meaning is “the dram of base renders all the noble substance doubtful or suspicious,” not that it extinguishes it altogether. This will appear from what precedes:—

The form of plausible manners.”

I read base as suggested by the word ease of the quarto of 1611: from its more direct opposition to noble in the following line. “To his own scandal” is to the scandal of the noble substance. The personal pronoun his was generally used for its, which is of late introduction in our language.

¹¹ Hamlet's speech to the apparition of his father seems to consist of three parts. When he first sees the spectre, he fortifies himself with an invocation:—

“Angels and ministers of grace, defend us!”

As the spectre approaches, he deliberates with himself, and determines that, whatever it be, he will venture to address it:—

“Be thou a spirit of health,” &c.

This he says while his father's spirit is advancing; he then, as he had determined, speaks to him, and calls him:—

“Hamlet,

King, father, royal Dane: O, answer me!”—Johnson.

¹² “Art thou a god, a man, or else a ghost?

Com'st thou from heaven, where bliss and solace dwell?

Or from the airie cold-engendering coast?

Or from the darksome dungeon-hold of hell?”

Acolastus, or After Wit, 1604.

³ Questionable must not be understood in its present acceptation of doubtful, but as conversable, inviting question or conversation; this was the most prevalent meaning of the word in Shakespeare's time.

Let me not burst in ignorance ! but tell,
 Why thy canóniz'd bones, hearsed in death,
 Have burst their cerements ! why the sepulchre,
 Wherein we saw thee quietly inurn'd¹⁴
 Hath op'd his ponderous and marble jaws,
 To cast thee up again ! What may this mean,
 That thou, dead corse, again, in complete steel¹⁵
 Revisit'st thus the glimpses of the moon,
 Making night hideous ; and we fools of nature,
 So horridly to shake our disposition,
 With thoughts beyond the reaches of our souls ?
 Say, why is this ? wherefore ? what should we do ?

[The Ghost beckons HAMLET

Hor. It beckons you to go away with it,
 As if it some impartment did desire
 To you alone.

Mar. Look, with what courteous action
 It waves¹⁶ you to a more removed ground :
 But do not go with it.

Hor. No, by no means.

Ham. It will not speak ; then I will follow it.

Hor. Do not, my lord.

Ham. Why, what should be the fear ?
 I do not set my life at a pin's fee ;
 And, for my soul, what can it do to that,
 Being a thing immortal as itself ?
 It waves me forth again ;—I'll follow it.

Hor. What, if it tempt you toward the flood, my lord,
 Or to the dreadful summit of the cliff,

¹⁴ Thus the folio. All the quartos have interr'd.

¹⁵ It appears from Olaus Wormius, cap. vii. that it was the custom to bury the Danish kings in their armour. The accentuation of complete on the first syllable, and canónized on the second, is not peculiar to Shakespeare, but the practice of several of his contemporaries.

¹⁶ The folio has wafts.

That beetles¹⁷ o'er his base into the sea?
 And there assume some other horrible form,
 Which might deprive your sovereignty of reason¹⁸,
 And draw you into madness? think of it:
 [The very place puts toys¹⁹ of desperation,
 Without more motive, into every brain,
 That looks so many fathoms to the sea,
 And hears it roar beneath.]

Ham. It waves²⁰ me still:—Go on, I'll follow thee

Mar. You shall not go, my lord.

Ham. Hold off your hands.

Hor. Be rul'd, you shall not go.

Ham. My fate cries out,
 And makes each petty artery in this body
 As hardy as the Némean lion's nerve.—

[Ghost beckons.

Still am I call'd;—unhand me, gentlemen;—

[Breaking from them.

By heaven, I'll make a ghost of him that lets²¹ me:—
 I say, away!—Go on, I'll follow thee.

[Exeunt Ghost and HAMLET.

Hor. He waxes desperate with imagination.

¹⁷ i. e. overhangs his base. Thus in Sidney's Arcadia, b. i.—
 "Hills lift up their beetle brows, as if they would overlooke the pleasantness of their under prospect." The verb to beetle is apparently of Shakespeare's creation.

¹⁸ "To deprive your sovereignty of reason," signifies to take from you or dispossess you of the command of reason. We have similar instances of raising the idea of virtues or qualities by giving them rank in Banquo's "royalty of nature," and even in this play we have "nobility of love," and "dignity of love."

¹⁹ Toys, i. e. charms, deceptions. See Harington's Notes on Ariosto, p. 119. This and the three succeeding lines are not in the folio.

²⁰ The folio has "It wafes me."

²¹ "Villains, set down the corse, or by St. Paul I'll make a corse of him that disobeys."

King Richard III. Act i. Sc. 1.

To let, in old language is to hinder, to stay, to obstruct; and still a current term in leases and other legal instruments.

Mar. Let's follow ; 'tis not fit thus to obey him.

Hor. Have after :—To what issue will this come ?

Mar. Something is rotten in the state of Denmark.

Hor. Heaven will direct it²².

Mar. Nay, let's follow him.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V. A more remote Part of the Platform.

Re-enter Ghost and HAMLET.

Ham. Where¹ wilt thou lead me ? speak, I'll go no further.

Ghost. Mark me.

Ham. I will.

Ghost. My hour is almost come,
When I to sulphurous and tormenting flames
Must render up myself.

Ham. Alas, poor ghost !

Ghost. Pity me not, but lend thy serious hearing
To what I shall unfold.

Ham. Speak, I am bound to hear.

Ghost. So art thou to revenge, when thou shalt hear.

Ham. What ?

Ghost. I am thy father's spirit ;
Doom'd for a certain term to walk the night ;
And, for the day, confin'd to lasting fires²,
Till the foul crimes, done in my days of nature,
Are burnt and purg'd away³. But that I am forbid

²² Marcellus answers Horatio's question, "To what issue will this come?" and Horatio also answers it himself with pious resignation, "Heaven will direct it."

² The folio has "confin'd to fast in fires." The emendation was proposed by Heath, and the word fires seems to confirm it. The first quarto reads, "Confin'd in flaming fire." Steevens, Farmer, and Mason, think the old reading correct ; but I am not convinced by their reasoning, and the word fires seems to require the epithet lasting.

³ Gawin Douglas really changes the Platonic hell into "the

To tell the secrets of my prison house,
 I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
 Would harrow up thy soul; freeze thy young blood;
 Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres⁴;
 Thy knotted⁵ and combined locks to part,
 And each particular hair to stand an end,
 Like quills upon the fretful porcupine⁶:
 But this eternal blazon must not be

 If thou didst ever thy dear father love,——

Ham. O heaven!

Ghost. Revenge his foul and most unnatural murder⁷.

Ham. Murder!

Ghost. Murder most foul, as in the best it is;
 But this most foul, strange, and unnatural.

Ham. Haste me to know't; that I, with wings as Contrakkit in the corpis be done away

And purgit."

⁴ "How have mine eyes out of their spheres been fitted
 In the distraction of this madding fever."—Sh. Son. 108.

⁵ The folio has knotty, and a little lower, "List, Hamlet, Oh list!"

⁶ Vide note on The Comedy of Errors, Act iii. Sc. 2. It is porpentine in the old editions in every instance. Fretful is the reading of the folio; the quartos read fearful. The irascible nature of the animal is noted in a curious passage of the Speculum Vitæ, by Richard Rolle, MS.—

"That beest is felle and sone is wrath,
 And when he is greved he wol do scathe;
 For when he tenes [angers] he launches out felly
 The scharpe pinnes in his body."

⁷ There is an allusion to the ghost in this play, or in an older one of the same name, by Lodge in his Wit's Miserie and the World's Madness, 1596. He describes one of his Devils, by name Hate Virtue, as "a foule lubber, who looks as pale as the vizard of the Ghost, which cried so miserably at the theatre, Hamlet, revenge."

^a The folio repeats haste and omits I in this speech.

As meditation, or the thoughts of love,
May sweep to my revenge.

Ghost. I find thee apt ;
And duller should'st thou be than the fat weed
That roots itself in ease on Lethe wharf⁸, Would'st thou not stir in this. Now, Hamlet, hear :
'Tis given out, that sleeping in mine orchard,
A serpent stung me ; so the whole ear of Denmark
Is by a forgèd process of my death
Rankly abus'd : but know, thou noble youth,
The serpent that did sting thy father's life⁹,
Now wears his crown.

Ham. O, my prophetick soul,
Mine uncle !

Ghost. Ay, that incestuous, that adulterate beast,

With witchcraft of his wit, with^a traitorous gifts,
(O wicked wit, and gifts, that have the power
So to seduce !) won to his shameful lust

The will of my most seeming-virtuous queen :

O, Hamlet, what a falling-off was there !
From me, whose love was of that dignity,
That it went hand in hand even with the vow
I made to her in marriage ; and to decline
Upon a wretch, whose natural gifts were poor
To those of mine !

But virtue, as it never will be mov'd,
Though lewdness court it in a shape of heaven ;
So lust, though to a radiant angel link'd,
Will sate itself in a celestial bed,
And prey on garbage.

But soft ! methinks, I scent the morning air ;

⁸ Thus the quartos. The folio has, "rots itself." In the Humorous Lieutenant, by Beaumont and Fletcher, we have :—

"This dull root pluck'd from Lethe's flood :—

⁹ The quarto, 1603, reads, heart.

Brief let me be :—Sleeping within mine orchard,
 My custom always in the afternoon,
 Upon my secure¹⁰ hour thy uncle stole,
 With juice of cursed hebenon¹¹ in a vial,
 And in the porches of mine ears did pour
 The leperous distilment : whose effect
 Holds such an enmity with blood of man,
 That, swift as quicksilver, it courses through
 The natural gates and alleys of the body ;
 And with a sudden vigour, it doth posset
 And curd, like eager¹² droppings into milk,
 The thin and wholesome blood : so did it mine ;
 And a most instant tetter bark'd about,
 Most lazar-like, with vile and loathsome crust,
 All my smooth body.
 Thus was I, sleeping ; by a brother's hand,

¹⁰ This is also a Latinism, securus, quiet, or unguarded.

¹¹ Hebenon has been said to be derived from henbane, the oil of which, according to Pliny, dropped into the ears, disturbs the brain : and there is sufficient evidence that it was held poisonous by our ancestors, in Anton's Satires, 1606, we have :—

“ The poison'd henbane, whose cold juice doth kill.”

And Drayton, in his Barons' Wars, p. 51 :—

“ The poisoning henbane and the mandrake dread.”

It is however certain that soporific and poisonous qualities were ascribed to ebony ; called ebene, and hebono, by old English writers. Thus Gower, in his description of the house of sleep in the Confessio Amantis, says :—

“ Of his couch

Within his chamber, if I shall touch,

Of hebenus that sleepy tree

The bordes all aboute be.

Marlowe, in his Jew of Malta, speaking of noxious things, says :—

“ The blood of Hydra, Lerna's bane,

The juyce of hebon, and cocytus breath.”

The French word hebenin, applied to anything made from ebony, comes indeed very close to the hebenon of Shakespeare. In confirmation of my conjecture, I find the newly discovered quarto, 1603, reads, hebona.

¹² In Sc. iv. we have eager air for sharp biting air. “ Eger,” says Baret, “ sower, sharp, acidus, aigre.”

Of life, of crown, of queen, at once despatch'd¹³ ;
 Cut off even in the blossoms of my sin,
 Unhousel'd¹⁴, disappointed¹⁵, unanel'd¹⁶ ;
 No reckoning made, but sent to my account
 With all my imperfections on my head :

Ham. O, horrible ! O, horrible ! most horrible¹⁷ !

Ghost. If thou hast nature in thee, bear it not Let not the royal bed of Denmark be
 A couch for luxury and damned incest.
 But, howsoever thou pursu'st this act,
 Taint not thy mind, nor let thy soul contrive
 Against thy mother aught ; leave her to heaven,
 And to those thorns that in her bosom lodge,
 To prick and sting her. Fare thee well at once !
 The glowworm shows the matin to be near,
 And 'gins to pale his uneffectual fire¹⁸ :

¹³ The quarto, 1603, has deprived. I have elsewhere observed that to despatch is to rid, and that in a summary manner.

¹⁴ Unhousel'd is without having received the sacrament. Thus in Hormanni Vulgaria, 1519 :—“He is departed without shryfte and housyll.” And in Speculum Vitæ, MS. it is a sin—

“To receive nat once in the yeare

Howsel and schrifte with conscience clere.”

¹⁵ Disappointed is the same as unappointed, and may be explained unprepared. A man well furnished for an enterprise is said to be well appointed. In Measure for Measure, Isabella addresses her brother, who is condemned to die, thus :—

“Therefore your best appointment make with speed.”

¹⁶ Unanel'd is without extreme unction. Thus in Cavendish's Life of Wolsey, edit. 1824, p. 324 :—“Then we began to put him in mind of Christ's passion ; and sent for the abbot of the place to anneal him.” “The fyfth sacrament is anoynting of seke men, the whiche oyle is halowed of the bysshop, and mynystred by preestes that ben of lawfull age, in grete peryll of dethe : in lyghtnes and abatyng of theyr sikenes, yf God wyll that they lyve ; and in forgyveynge of their venyal synnes and releasyng of theyr payne, yf they shal deye.”—The Festyval, fol. 171.

¹⁷ This line in the old copies is given to the Ghost. It had long since been suggested to Johnson that it evidently belongs to Hamlet, and Garrick always thus delivered it.

¹⁸ Uneffectual, i. e. shining without heat. The use of to pale as a verb is rather unusual, but not peculiar to Shakespeare. It is to be found in Chaucer and our elder writers.

Adieu, adieu! Hamlet, remember me. [Exit.

Ham. O all you host of heaven! O earth! What —else?

And shall I couple hell?—O fye!—Hold, hold, my heart;

And you, my sinews, grow not instant old,
But bear me stiffly up!—Remember thee?
Ay, thou poor ghost, while memory holds a seat
In this distracted globe. Remember thee?

Yea, from the table of my memory¹⁹
I'll wipe away all trivial fond records,
All saws of books, all forms, all pressures past,
That youth and observation copied there;
And thy commandment all alone shall live
Within the book and volume of my brain,
Unmix'd with baser matter: yes, yes, by heaven.

O most pernicious woman!

O villain, villain, smiling, damned villain!

My tables²⁰, my tables,—meet it is, I set it down,
That one may smile, and smile, and be a villain;

At least, I am sure, it may be so in Denmark:

So, uncle, there you are. Now to my word²¹;

It is, Adieu, adieu! remember me. [Writing.

I have sworn't.

¹⁹ Thus in the Second Part of King Henry IV. Act iv. Sc. 1:—

“And therefore will he wipe his tables clean,

And keep no tell-tale in his memory.”

“Tables or books, or registers for memorie of things,” were then used by all ranks, and contained prepared leaves from which what was written with a silver style could easily be effaced.

²⁰ I follow the folio which repeats the words “my tables,” and in a preceding line the word yes, thinking these repetitions have been intended to mark Hamlet's agitation.

²¹ The quarto, 1603, has, Now to the words. By Now to my word Hamlet means Now to my motto, my word of remembrance; or as it is expressed by King Richard III. word of courage. Steevens asserted that the allusion is to the military watchword. A word, mot, or motto, was any short sentence, such as is inscribed on a token, or under a device or coat of arms. It was a common phrase. See Ben Jonson's Works, by Mr. Gifford, vol. ii. p. 102.

Hor. [Within.] My lord! my lord!

Mar. [Within.] Lord Hamlet!

Hor. [Within.] Heaven secure him!

Ham. So be it!

Mar. [Within.] Hillo, ho, ho, my lord!

Ham. Hillo, ho, ho, boy! come, bird, come²².

Enter HORATIO and MARCELLUS.

Mar. How is't, my noble lord!

Hor. What news, my lord?

Ham. O wonderful!

Hor. Good my lord, tell it.

Ham. No;

You will reveal it.

Hor. Not I, my lord, by heaven.

Mar. Nor I, my lord.

Ham. How say you then; would heart of man once think it?

But you'll be secret,—

Hor. Mar. Ay, by heaven, my lord.

Ham. There's ne'er a villain, dwelling in all Denmark,
But he's an arrant knave.

Hor. There needs no ghost, my lord, come from the grave,

To tell us this.

Ham. Why, right; you are in the right;
And so, without more circumstance at all,
I hold it fit, that we shake hands, and part:
You, as your business, and desire, shall point you;—
For every man hath business, and desire,
Such as it is,—and, for my own poor part,
Look you, I'll go pray.

²² This is the call which falconers use to their hawk in the air when they would have him come down to them. Thus in Tyro's Roaring Megge, 1598:—

“Yet ere I journie, Ile go see the kyte,
Come, come, bird, come: pox on you, you can mute.”

Hor. These are but wild and hurling²³ words, my lord.

Ham. I am sorry they offend you, heartily; yes,
'Faith, heartily.

Hor. There's no offence, my lord.

Ham. Yes, by Saint Patrick²⁴, but there is, Horatio,
And much offence too. Touching this vision here,—
It is an honest ghost, that let me tell you :
For your desire to know what is between us,
O'ermaster't as you may. And now, good friends,
As you are friends, scholars, and soldiers,
Give me one poor request.

Hor. What is't, my lord ?
We will.

Ham. Never make known what you have seen tonight.

Hor. Mar. My lord, we will not.

Ham. Nay, but swear't.

Hor. In faith,
My lord, not I.

Mar. Nor I, my lord, in faith.

Ham. Upon my sword.

Mar. We have sworn, my lord, already.

Ham. Indeed, upon my sword, indeed.

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear.

Ham. Ha, ha, boy ! say'st thou so ? art thou there, true-penny^a ?

Come on,—you hear this fellow in the cellarage,—
Consent to swear.

²³ The quartos have whirling.

²⁴ Warburton has ingeniously defended Shakespeare for making the Danish prince swear by St. Patrick, by observing that the whole northern world had their learning from Ireland. It is, however, more probable that the poet seized the first popular imprecation that came to his mind, without regarding whether it suited the country or character of the person to whom he gave it.

^a Mr. Collier was informed by some gentlemen of Sheffield that true-penny is a mining term, signifying a particular indication in the soil of the direction in which ore is to be found.

Hor. Propose the oath, my lord.

Ham. Never to speak of this that you have seen,
Swear by my sword²⁵.

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear.

Ham. Hic & ubique! then we'll shift our ground:—
Come hither, gentlemen,
And lay your hands again upon my sword:
Swear by my sword,
Never to speak of this that you have heard.

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear^a.

Ham. Well said, old mole! canst work i' the ground²⁶ so fast?

A worthy pioneer!—Once more remove, good friends.

Hor. O day and night, but this is wondrous strange!

Ham. And therefore as a stranger give it welcome.
There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio,
Than are dreamt of in your²⁷ philosophy.

But come;—

Here, as before, never, so help you mercy!

How strange or odd soe'er I bear myself,

As I, perchance, hereafter shall think meet

To put an antick disposition on,—

That you, at such times seeing me, never shall,

With arms encumber'd thus, or this head-shake,

²⁵ The custom of swearing by the sword, or rather by the cross at the upper end of it, is very ancient. In the Soliloquy of Roland, addressed to his sword, the cross which the gard and handle form is not forgotten:—"Capulo eburneo candidissime, cruce aurea splendidissime," &c.—Turpini de Gestis Carol. Mag. cap. 22. The name of Jesus was not unfrequently inscribed on the handle. The allusions to this custom are very numerous in our old writers, and Warburton has noticed it in Bartholinus De Causis Contempt. Mort. apud Danos. Simon Maioli, in his very curious book Dierum Canicularium, mentions that the ancient Germans swore by the sword and death. Leontes, in The Winter's Tale, Act ii. Sc. 3, says:—

"Swear by this sword,
Thou wilt perform my bidding."

^a Some of the later quartos have "Swear by his sword."

²⁶ The quartos have earth.

²⁷ Thus all the quartos. The folio has "our philosophy."

Or by pronouncing of some doubtful phrase,
As, "Well, well, we know;"—or, "We could, an if we would;" or, "If we list to speak;"—or, "There be, an if they might;"—

Or such ambiguous giving out, to note
That you know aught of me:—This not to do²⁸;
So grace and mercy at your most need help you!
Swear.

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear.

Ham. Rest, rest, perturbed spirit²⁹! So, gentlemen,
With all my love I do commend me to you:
And what so poor a man as Hamlet is
May do, to express his love and friending to you,
God willing, shall not lack. Let us go in together;
And still your fingers on your lips, I pray.
The time is out of joint;—O cursed spite!
That ever I was born to set it right!
Nay, come, let's go together.

[Exeunt.]

²⁸ The quarto 1604 reads—"this do swear." The construction of this passage is rather embarrassed, but the sense is sufficiently obvious without explanation.

²⁹ "Shakespeare has riveted our attention to the ghost by a succession of forcible circumstances:—by the previous report of the terrified sentinels,—by the solemnity of the hour at which the phantom walks,—by its martial stride and discriminating armour, visible only per incertam lunam, by the glimpses of the moon,—by its long taciturnity, by its preparation to speak, when interrupted by the morning cock,—by its mysterious reserve throughout its first scene with Hamlet,—by his resolute departure with it, and the subsequent anxiety of his attendants,—by its conducting him to a solitary angle of the platform, by its voice from beneath the earth,—and by its unexpected burst on us in the closet. Hamlet's late interview with the spectre must in particular be regarded as a stroke of dramatic artifice. The phantom might have told his story in the presence of the officers and Horatio, and yet have rendered itself as inaudible to them as it afterwards did to the queen. But suspense was the poet's object; and never was it more effectually created than in the present instance. Six times has the royal semblance appeared, but till now has been withheld from speaking. For this event we have waited with impatient curiosity, unaccompanied by lassitude, or remitted attention."—Steevens.

ACT II.

SCENE I. A Room in Polonius' House.Enter POLONIUS and REYNALDO.Polonius.

IVE him this^a money, and these notes, Reynaldo.

Rey. I will, my lord.Pol. You shall do marv'lous wisely, good Reynaldo, Before you visit him, to make inquiry Of his behaviour.Rey. My lord, I did intend it.Pol. Marry, well said: very well said. Look you, sir, Inquire me first what Danskers¹ are in Paris; And how, and who, what means, and where they keep, What company, at what expense; and finding, By this encompassment and drift of question, That they do know my son, come you more nearer Than your particular demands will touch it: Take you, as 'twere, some distant knowledge of him; As thus,—“ I know his father, and his friends, And, in part, him:”—Do you mark this, Reynaldo?Rey. Ay, very well, my lord.Pol. “And, in part, him;—but, “you may say,” not well:

But, if't be he I mean, he's very wild;
 Addicted so and so;”—and there put on him
 What forgeries you please; marry, none so rank
 As may dishonour him; take heed of that;
 But, sir, such wanton, wild, and usual slips,

^a The folio here misprints his for this; and two lines lower maruels, to mark the necessary syncope marv'lous.

As are companions noted and most known
To youth and liberty.

Rey. As gaming, my lord.

Pol. Ay, or drinking, fencing², swearing, quarrelling, Drabbing:—You may go so far.

Rey. My lord, that would dishonour him.

Pol. 'Faith, no; as you may season it in the charge.
You must not put another scandal on him,
That he is open to incontinency;
That's not my meaning: but breathe his faults so quaintly,

That they may seem the taints of liberty;
The flash and outbreak of a fiery mind;
A savageness in unreclaimed blood,
Of general assault.

Rey. But, my good lord,——

Pol. Wherefore should you do this?

Rey. Ay, my lord,

I would know that.

Pol. Marry, sir, here's my drift;

And, I believe, it is a fetch of warrant³:

You laying these slight sullies on my son,
As 'twere a thing a little soil'd i' the working,
Mark you,

Your party in converse, him you would sound,
Having ever seen in the prenominate crimes,
The youth you breathe of, guilty, be assur'd,
He closes with you in this consequence;

“Good sir,” or so⁴; or “friend,” or “gentleman,”—
According to the phrase, or the addition,
Of man, and country.

² “The cunning of fencers is now applied to quarrelling: they think themselves no men, if for stirring of a straw, they prove not their valure upon some bodies fleshe.”—Gosson's Schole of Abuse, 1579.

³ The quarto 1604 has “a fetch of wit.”

⁴ So, for so forth, as in the last act:—“Six French rapiers and poniards with their assigns, as girdle, hanger, and so.”

Rey. Very good, my lord.

Pol. And then, sir, does he this?—He does—
What was I about to say?—By the mass⁵, I was about to say something:—Where did I leave?

Rey. At, “closes in the consequence.”
At, “friend, or so,” and “gentleman.”

Pol. At, closes in the consequence,—Ay, marry;
He closes with you thus:—“I know the gentleman;
I saw him yesterday, or t’other day,
Or then, or then; with such, or such; and, as you say,
There was he gaming; there o’ertook in’s rouse;
There falling out at tennis: or, perchance,
I saw him enter such a house of sale
(Videlicet, a brothel), or so forth.”

See you now;
Your bait of falsehood takes this carp⁶ of truth:
And thus do we of wisdom and of reach,
With windlaces, and with assays of bias⁷,
By indirections find directions out:
So, by my former lecture and advice,
Shall you my son: You have me, have you not?

Rey. My lord, I have.

Pol. God b’wi’you; fare you well.

Rey. Good my lord,——

Pol. Observe his inclination in yourself^a.

Rey. I shall, my lord.

Pol. And let him ply his musick.

Rey. Well, my lord.

Pol. Farewell! [Exit.

⁵ “By the mass” is omitted in the folio.

⁶ The folios, erroneously, have cape.

⁷ Windlaces is here used metaphorically for tortuous devices.
Thus in the Mirror for Magistrates, p. 356:—

“Which by sly drifts, and windlaces aloof,
They brought about.”

“To assay, or rather essay, of the French word essayer, tentare,” says Baret.

^a i. e. in your own person, personally add your own observations of his conduct to these inquiries respecting him.

Enter OPHELIA.

Pol. How now, Ophelia? what's the matter?

Oph. Alas, my lord, I have been so affrighted!

Pol. With what, in the name of heaven?

Oph. My lord, as I was sewing in my closet^a,
Lord Hamlet,—with his doublet all unbrac'd;
No hat upon his head; his stockings foul'd,
Ungarter'd, and down-gyved^b to his ancle;
Pale as his shirt; his knees knocking each other;
And with a look so piteous in purport,
As if he had been loosed out of hell,
To speak of horrors,—he comes before me.

Pol. Mad for thy love?

Oph. My lord, I do not know;
But, truly, I do fear it.

Pol. What said he?

Oph. He took me by the wrist, and held me hard;
Then goes he to the length of all his arm;
And, with his other hand thus o'er his brow,
He falls to such perusal of my face,
As he would draw it. Long stay'd he so;
At last,—a little shaking of mine arm,
And thrice his head thus waving up and down,—
He rais'd a sigh so piteous and profound,
As it did seem to shatter all his bulk⁹,
And end his being: That done, he lets me go:

^a The folio has chamber.

^b Hanging down like the loose cincture which confines the fetters or gyves round the ancles.

⁹ i. e. his breast. "The bulke or breast of a man, Thorax, la poitrine."—Baret. Thus in King Richard III. Act i. Sc. 4, Clarence says:— "But still the envious flood

Kept in my soul, and would not let it forth,—

But smothered it within my panting bulk."

Malone cites this and the following passage, and yet explains it all his body!— "Her heart Beating her bulk, that his hand shakes withal."

And, with his head over his shoulder turn'd,
 He seem'd to find his way without his eyes ;
 For out o' doors he went without their help,
 And, to the last, bended their light on me.

Pol. Come¹⁰, go with me ; I will go seek the king.
 This is the very ecstasy of love ;
 Whose violent property foredoes¹¹ itself,
 And leads the will to desperate undertakings,
 As oft as any passion under heaven,
 That does afflict our natures. I am sorry,—
 What ! have you given him any hard words of late ?

Oph. No, my good lord ; but, as you did command,
 I did repel his letters, and denied
 His access to me.

Pol. That hath made him mad.
 I am sorry, that with better heed and judgement,
 I had not quoted¹² him : I fear'd, he did but trifle,
 And meant to wrack thee ; but, beshrew my jealousy !
 It seems, it is as proper¹³ to our age
 To cast beyond ourselves in our opinions,
 As it is common for the younger sort
 To lack discretion. Come, go we to the king :
 This must be known ; which, being kept close, might move
 More grief to hide, than hate to utter love.

[Exeunt.

¹⁰ The folio omits Come. In the next speech of Polonius it has speed instead of heed, and feare for fear'd.

¹¹ To foredo and to undo were synonymous. Thus in Othello :—
 “ That either makes me or fordoes me quite.”

¹² To quote is to note, to mark. Thus in The Rape of Lucrece :—
 “ Yea, the illiterate

Will quote my loathed trespass in my looks.”

This word in the quarto is written coted, which was the old orthography of quoted.

¹³ The quartos read, “ By heaven it is as proper,” &c.

SCENE II. A Room in the Castle.

Enter King, Queen, ROSENCRANTZ, GUILDENSTERN, and Attendants.

King. Welcome, dear Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern!

Moreover that we much did long to see you,
 The need, we have to use you, did provoke
 Our hasty sending. Something have you heard
 Of Hamlet's transformation; so I call it,
 Since not¹ th' exterior nor the inward man
 Resembles that it was. What it should be,
 More than his father's death, that thus hath put him
 So much from th' understanding of himself,
 I cannot deem² of. I entreat you both,
 That,—being of so young days brought up with him;
 And, since, so neighbour'd to his youth and humour³,—
 That you vouchsafe your rest here in our court
 Some little time: so by your companies
 To draw him on to pleasures; and to gather,
 So much as from occasion you may glean,
 Whether aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus⁴,
 That, open'd, lies within our remedy.

Queen. Good gentlemen, he hath much talk'd of you;
 And, sure I am, two men there are not living,
 To whom he more adheres. If it will please you
 To show us so much gentry⁵, and good will,
 As to expend your time with us awhile,
 For the supply and profit of our hope,

² Thus the first folio. The quartos have dream.

³ The quarto has, haviour.

⁴ This line is omitted in the folio.

⁵ Gentry for gentle courtesy. "Gentlemanliness or gentry, kindness, or natural goodness. Generositas."—Baret.

Your visitation shall receive such thanks
As fits a king's remembrance.

Ros. Both your majesties
Might, by the sovereign power you have of us,
Put your dread pleasures more into command
Than to entreaty.

Guil. But⁶ we both obey ;
And here give up ourselves, in the full bent⁷,
To lay our service freely at your feet,
To be commanded.

King. Thanks, Rosencrantz, and gentle Guilden-stern.

Queen. Thanks, Guildenstern, and gentle Rosencrantz ;

And I beseech you instantly to visit
My too much changed son.—Go, some of ye,
And bring these gentlemen where Hamlet is.

Guil. Heavens make our presence, and our practices.
Pleasant and helpful to him !

Queen. Ay, Amen !

[Exeunt ROS. GUIL. and some Attendants

Enter POLONIUS.

Pol. Th' ambassadors from Norway, my good lord,
Are joyfully return'd.

King. Thou still hast been the father of good news.

Pol. Have I, my lord ? Assure you, my good liege,
I hold my duty, as I hold my soul,
Both to my God, and to my gracious king ;
And I do think (or else this brain of mine

⁶ The first folio omits but ; and in the next line but one has services.

⁷ This metaphorical expression seems derived from bending a bow. So in Much Ado about Nothing, Act ii. Sc. 3 :—"it seems her affections have their full bent." Hamlet in a future scene says :—
"They fool me to the very top of my bent."

i. e. to the utmost of my inclination or disposition.

Hunts not the trail⁸ of policy so sure
As it hath⁹ us'd to do) that I have found
The very cause of Hamlet's lunacy.

King. O, speak of that ; that do I long to hear.

Pol. Give first admittance to the ambassadors ;
My news shall be the fruit¹⁰ to that great feast.

King. Thyself do grace to them, and bring them in.
[Exit POLONIUS.]

He tells me, my dear Gertrude¹¹, he hath found
The head and source of all your son's distemper.

Queen. I doubt, it is no other but the main ;
His father's death, and our o'erhasty marriage.

Re-enter POLONIUS, with VOLTIMAND and CORNELIUS.

King. Well, we shall sift him.—Welcome, my good friends !

Say, Voltimand, what from our brother Norway ?

Vol. Most fair return of greetings and desires.

Upon our first, he sent out to suppress
His nephew's levies ; which to him appear'd
To be a preparation 'gainst the Polack ;
But, better look'd into, he truly found
It was against your highness : Whereat griev'd,—
That so his sickness, age, and impotence,
Was falsely borne in hand¹²,—sends out arrests
On Fortinbras ; which he, in brief, obeys ;
Receives rebuke from Norway ; and, in fine,

⁸ i. e. the trace or track. Vestigium. It is that vestige, whether of footmarks or scent, which enables the hunter to follow the game.

⁹ The first folio reads, as I have.

¹⁰ Thus the quartos. The first folio misprints news for fruit, by which dessert is meant.

¹¹ The folios have, "my sweet queen, that."

¹² i. e. dehuded, imposed on, deceived by false appearances. It is used several times by Shakespeare, Macbeth, Act iii. Sc. 1 ; Much Ado about Nothing, Act iv. Sc. 1 ; Cymbeline, Sc. ult.

Makes vow before his uncle, never more
 To give the assay¹³ of arms against your majesty.
 Whereon old Norway, overcome with joy,
 Gives him three thousand crowns in annual fee¹⁴;
 And his commission, to employ those soldiers,
 So levied as before, against the Polack:
 With an entreaty, herein further shown,

[Gives a Paper.]

That it might please you to give quiet pass
 Through your dominions for this enterprise;
 On such regards of safety, and allowance,
 As therein are set down.

King.

It likes us well:

And, at our more consider'd time, we'll read,
 Answer, and think upon this business.
 Mean time, we thank you for your well-took labour:
 Go to your rest; at night we'll feast together.
 Most welcome home!

[Exeunt VOLTIMAND and CORNELIUS.]

Pol.

This business is well ended.

My liege, and madam, to expostulate¹⁵
 What majesty should be, what duty is,
 Why day is day, night night, and time is time,
 Were nothing but to waste night, day, and time.
 Therefore,—since brevity is the soul of wit,
 And tediousness the limbs and outward flourishes,—
 I will be brief: Your noble son is mad:

¹³ To give the assay of arms is “to attempt or essay anything in arms, or by force. Accingi armis.”

¹⁴ That is, “the king gave his nephew a feud or fee in land of that annual value.” The quartos read three score thousand.

¹⁵ Expostulate, i. e. to inquire. Mr. Hunter has given two pertinent instances of the use of the word in this sense. “Polonius is a man bred in courts, exercised in business, stored with observation, confident in his knowledge, proud of his eloquence, and declining into dotage. His mode of oratory is designed to ridicule the practice of those times, of prefaces that made no introduction, and of method that embarrassed rather than explained.”

Mad call I it: for, to define true madness,
What is't, but to be nothing else but mad:
But let that go.

Queen. More matter, with less art.

Pol. Madam, I swear I use no art at all.
That he is mad, 'tis true: 'tis true, 'tis pity;
And pity 'tis, 'tis true: a foolish figure;
But farewell it; for I will use no art.
Mad let us grant him then: and now remains,
That we find out the cause of this effect;
Or, rather say, the cause of this defect;
For this effect, defective, comes by cause:
Thus it remains, and the remainder thus.
Perpend.

I have a daughter; have, while she is mine;
Who, in her duty and obedience, mark,
Hath given me this: Now gather and surmise.
—"To the celestial, and my soul's idol, the most beautified Ophelia,"——

That's an ill phrase, a vile phrase; beautified is a vile phrase¹⁶; but you shall hear.—Thus:

"In her excellent white bosom, these, &c."¹⁷

Queen. Came this from Hamlet to her?

Pol. Good madam, stay awhile; I will be faithful.—

"Doubt thou, the stars are fire; [Reads.

¹⁶ Vile as Polonius esteems the phrase, from its equivocal meaning, Shakespeare has used it again in The Two Gentlemen of Verona:—

"Seeing you are beautified
With goodly shape," &c.

Nash, in his dedication of Christ's Tears over Jerusalem, 1594:—"To the most beautified Lady Elizabeth Cary." It is not uncommon in dedications and encomiastic verses of the poet's age.

¹⁷ See note on The Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act iii. Sc. 1. Formerly the word these was usually added at the end of the superscription of letters. The folio reads:—"These in her excellent white bosom these."

Doubt, that the sun doth move :
 Doubt truth to be a liar ;
 But never doubt I love.

O dear Ophelia, I am ill at these numbers ; I have not art to reckon my groans ; but that I love thee best, O most best, believe it. Adieu.

Thine evermore, most dear lady, whilst this machine is to him, HAMLET."

This, in obedience, hath my daughter shown me :
 And more above, hath his solicitings,
 As they fell out by time, by means, and place,
 All given to mine ear.

King. But how hath she Receiv'd his love ?

Pol. What do you think of me ?

King. As of a man faithful and honourable.

Pol. I would fain prove so. But what might you think,

When I had seen this hot love on the wing
 (As I perceiv'd it, I must tell you that,
 Before my daughter told me), what might you,
 Or my dear majesty your queen here, think,
 If I had play'd the desk, or table-book ;
 Or given my heart a winking, mute and dumb¹⁸ ;
 Or look'd upon this love with idle sight ;
 What might you think ? No, I went round¹⁹ to work,

¹⁸ " If I had play'd the desk, or table-book ;

Or given my heart a winking, mute and dumb."

That is, " If I had acted the part of depository of their secret loves, or given my heart a hint to be mute about their passion." The quartos read :—" given my heart a working," and the modern editors follow this reading: I prefer the reading of the folio. " Conniventia, a winking at ; a sufferance ; a feigning not to see or know." The pleonasm, mute and dumb, is found in the Rape of Lucrece :—

" And in my hearing be you mute and dumb."

¹⁹ i. e. plainly, roundly, without reserve. Polonius, in the third act, says, " be round with him."

And my young mistress thus I did bespeak ;
 “ Lord Hamlet is a prince out of thy star²⁰ ;
 This must not be :” and then I precepts gave her,
 That she should lock herself from his resort,
 Admit no messengers, receive no tokens.
 Which done, she took the fruits of my advice ;
 And he, repulsed (a short tale to make),
 Fell into a sadness ; then into a fast ;
 Thence to a watch ; thence into a weakness ;
 Thence to a lightness ; and, by this declension,
 Into the madness wherein now he raves²¹,
 And all we wail²² for.

King. Do you think, 'tis this ?

Queen. It may be, very likely.

Pol. Hath there been such a time (I'd fain know that),

That I have positively said, “ 'Tis so,”

When it prov'd otherwise ?

King. Not that I know.

Pol. Take this from this, if this be otherwise :

[Pointing to his Head and Shoulder.

If circumstances lead me, I will find

Where truth is hid, though it were hid indeed

Within the centre.

²⁰ Thus all the old copies, prior to the folio of 1632, in which it is changed to sphere; possibly as more intelligible. “ Out of thy star,” probably means, placed above thee in destiny. We have “ fortune's star” in a former scene. In the Letter written to hoax Malvolio we have, “ in my stars I am above thee.”

²¹ “ The ridicule of this character is here admirably sustained. He would not only be thought to have discovered this intrigue by his own sagacity, but to have remarked all the stages of Hamlet's disorder, from his sadness to his raving, as regularly as his physician could have done; when all the while the madness was only feigned. The humour of this is exquisite from a man who tells us, with a confidence peculiar to small politicians, that he could find—

‘ Where truth was hid, though it were hid indeed
 Within the centre.’”

Warburton.

²² So the folio. The quartos have mourn.

King. How may we try it further?

Pol. You know, sometimes he walks four hours together,

Here in the lobby.

Queen. So he does^a, indeed.

Pol. At such a time I'll loose my daughter to him :
Be you and I behind an arras then ;
Mark the encounter : if he love her not,
And be not from his reason fallen thereon,
Let me be no assistant for a state,
But keep a farm, and carters.

King. We will try it.

Enter HAMLET, reading.

Queen. But look, where sadly the poor wretch comes reading.

Pol. Away, I do beseech you, both away ;
I'll board²³ him presently :—O, give me leave.—

[Exeunt KING, QUEEN, and Attendants.]

How does my good Lord Hamlet ?

Ham. Well, god-'a-mercy^b.

Pol. Do you know me, my lord ?

Ham. Excellent well ; you are a fishmonger.

Pol. Not I, my lord.

Ham. Then I would you were so honest a man.

Pol. Honest, my lord ?

Ham. Ay, sir ; to be honest, as this world goes, is to be one man picked out of ten^c thousand.

Pol. That's very true, my lord.

Ham. For if the sun breed maggots in a dead dog, being a god, kissing carrion²⁴,——Have you a daughter ?

^a The folio prints ha's.

²³ i. e. accost, address him. See Twelfth Night, Act i. Sc. 3.

^b God-'a-mercy here responds to the French phrase grand-merci.

^c Thus all the quartos. The folio has "two thousand."

²⁴ Being a god, kissing carrion. The old copies read, "being a

Pol. I have, my lord.

Ham. Let her not walk i' the sun : conception is a blessing ; but as your daughter may conceive,—friend, look to't.

Pol. How say you by that ? [Aside.] Still harping on my daughter :—yet he knew me not at first ; he said, I was a fishmonger : He is far gone, far gone : and, truly in my youth I suffered much extremity for love ; very near this. I'll speak to him again.—What do you read, my lord ?

Ham. Words, words, words !

Pol. What is the matter, my lord ?

Ham. Between who ?

Pol. I mean, the matter that you read²⁵, my lord.

Ham. Slanders, sir : for the satirical rogue²⁶ says good kissing carrion,” out of which several vain endeavours have been made to extract a sense. Warburton made the correction, with which Johnson was delighted. The sense is evidently : “for if the sun, being a god, breed maggots in a dead dog, let not your daughter walk in the sun :—(i. e. let her not be exposed to corrupting influences :) conception is a blessing, but not as your daughter may conceive.” I cannot think with Coleridge that there is any reference to Polonius himself, or that a meaning can be made of “a dead dog” being a “good kissing carrion !” Warburton pointed out the same kind of expression in Cymbeline. “Exposing it to the greedy touch of common-kissing Titan :” and Malone has adduced the following passage from the play of K. Edward III. in confirmation of this reading :—

“The freshest summer's day doth soonest taint
The loathed carrion that it seems to kiss.”

Warburton endeavours to prove that Shakespeare intended the passage as a vindication of the ways of Providence in permitting evil to abound in the world. He observes that Shakespeare “had an art not only of acquainting the audience with what his actors say, but what they think.” There was certainly much ingenuity in the emendation (which is unquestionably right) as well as in the argument, but the latter appears totally irrelevant and strained, and certainly was rather intended to show the skill and ingenuity of the critic than to raise the character of the poet, or display his true meaning.

²⁵ The folio has, “the matter that you mean ;” and in the next line slave instead of rogue.

²⁶ By the satirical rogue, Warburton will have it that Shake-

here, that old men have gray beards : that their faces are wrinkled ; their eyes purging thick amber, and plum-tree gum ; and that they have a plentiful lack of wit, together with most weak hams : All which, sir, though I most powerfully and potently believe, yet I hold it not honesty to have it thus set down ; for yourself, sir, should be old as I am, if, like a crab, you could go backward.

Pol. Though this be madness, yet there's method in't.

[Aside.] Will you walk out of the air, my lord ?

Ham. Into my grave ?

Pol. Indeed, that is out o' the air.—How pregnant sometimes his replies are ! a happiness that often madness hits on, which reason and sanity could not so prosperously be delivered of. I will leave him, and suddenly contrive the means of meeting between him and my daughter. [Aside.]—My honourable lord, I will most humbly take my leave of you²⁷.

Ham. You cannot, sir, take from me any thing that I will more willingly part withal ; except my life, except my life, except my life^a. ✕

Pol. Fare you well, my lord.

Ham. These tedious old fools !

Enter ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

Pol. You go to seek the Lord Hamlet ; there he is.

Ros. God save you, sir !

[To POLONIUS.

[Exit POLONIUS.

Guil. My honour'd lord !—

Ros. My most dear lord !—

speare means Juvenal, and refers to a passage on old age in his tenth satire. Dr. Farmer states that there was a translation of that satire by Sir John Beaumont, but is uncertain whether it was printed in Shakespeare's time. The defects of age were, however, a common topic of moral reflection.

²⁷ This speech is abridged thus in the quartos :—" I will leave him and my daughter. My lord, I will take my leave of you."

^a The repetitions of " except my life " are not in the folio

Surprised to Hamlet

Ham. My excellent good friends! How dost thou, Guildenstern? Ah, Rosencrantz! Good lads, how do ye both?

Ros. As the indifferent children of the earth.

Guil. Happy, in that we are not overhappy; On fortune's cap we are not the very button.

Ham. Nor the soles of her shoe?

Ros. Neither, my lord.

Ham. Then you live about her waist, or in the middle of her favours?

Guil. 'Faith, her privates we.

Ham. In the secret parts of fortune? O, most true; she is a strumpet. What news?

Ros. None, my lord; but that the world's grown honest.

Ham. Then is doomsday near: But your news is not true²⁸. [Let me question more in particular: What have you, my good friends, deserved at the hands of fortune, that she sends you to prison hither?

Guil. Prison, my lord!

Ham. Denmark's a prison.

Ros. Then is the world one.

Ham. A goodly one; in which there are many confines, wards, and dungeons; Denmark being one of the worst.

Ros. We think not so, my lord.

Ham. Why, then 'tis none to you; for there is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so: to me it is a prison.

Ros. Why, then your ambition makes it one; 'tis too narrow for your mind.

Ham. O God! I could be bounded in a nutshell, and count myself a king of infinite space; were it not that I have bad dreams.

Guil. Which dreams, indeed, are ambition; for the ²⁸ All within crotchets is wanting in the quarto copies.

very substance of the ambitious is merely the shadow of a dream²⁹.

Ham. A dream itself is but a shadow.

Ros. Truly, and I hold ambition of so airy and light a quality, that it is but a shadow's shadow.

Ham. Then are our beggars, bodies; and our monarchs, and outstretch'd heroes, the beggars' shadows: Shall we to the court? for, by my fay³⁰, I cannot reason.

Ros. Guil. We'll wait upon you.

Ham. No such matter: I will not sort you with the rest of my servants; for, to speak to you like an honest man, I am most dreadfully attended.] But, in the beaten way of friendship, what make you at Elsinore³¹?

Ros. To visit you, my lord; no other occasion.

Ham. Beggar that I am, I am even poor in thanks; but I thank you; and sure, dear friends, my thanks are too dear, a halfpenny. Were you not sent for? Is it your own inclining? Is it a free visitation? Come, come; deal justly with me: come, come; nay, speak.

Guil. What should we say, my lord?

²⁹ Shakespeare has accidentally inverted the expression of Pindar, that the state of humanity is σκιάς ὄναρ, the dream of a shadow. Thus also Sir John Davies:—

“Man's life is but a dreame, nay, less than so,
A shadow of a dreame.”

And Lord Sterline, in his Darius, 1603:—

“Whose best was but the shadow of a dream.”

These passages remind me of a beautiful thought in George Chapman's Poem on the Death of Prince Henry, which I have cited elsewhere:—

“O God, what doth not one short hour snatch up
Of all man's gloss?—Still overflows the cup
Of his burst cares; put with no nerves together,
And lighter than the shadow of a feather.”

³⁰ i. e. by my faith. See note on the Induction to Taming of a Shrew, p. 128.

³¹ i. e. what do you. See note on Love's Labour's Lost, Act iv Sc. 3.

Ham. Any thing, but to the purpose. You were sent for; and there is a kind of confession in your looks, which your modesties have not craft enough to colour: I know, the good king and queen have sent for you.

Ros. To what end, my lord?

Ham. That you must teach me. But let me conjure you by the rights of our fellowship, by the consonancy of our youth, by the obligation of our ever-preserved love, and by what more dear a better proposer could charge you withal, be even and direct with me, whether you were sent for, or no?

Ros. What say you? [To GUILDENSTERN.]

Ham. Nay, then I have an eye of you³²; [Aside.] —if you love me, hold not off.

Guil. My lord, we were sent for.

Ham. I will tell you why; so shall my anticipation prevent your discovery, and your secrecy to the king and queen moult no feather. I have of late (but, wherefore, I know not,) lost all my mirth, forgone all custom of exercises: and, indeed, it goes so heavily³³ with my disposition, that this goodly frame, the earth, seems to me a steril promontory; this most excellent canopy, the air, look you, this brave o'erhanging firmament, this majestical roof fretted with golden fire³⁴, why, it appears no other thing to me, than a foul and pestilent congregation of vapours. What a piece of work is a man! How noble in reason! how infinite in faculties! in form and moving, how express and admirable! in action, how like an angel! in apprehension, how like a god! the beauty of the world! the paragon of animals! And yet, to me, what is this quintessence of dust? man delights not me, no nor woman neither; though, by your smiling, you seem to say so.

³² To have an eye of any one is to have an inkling of his purpose, or to be aware of what he is about. The first quarto has:—"Nay, then I see how the wind sets."

Ros. My lord, there was no such stuff in my thoughts.

Ham. Why did you laugh then, when I said, "Man delights not me?"

Ros. To think, my lord, if you delight not in man, what lenten³⁵ entertainment the players shall receive from you: we coted³⁶ them on the way; and hither are they coming, to offer you service.

Ham. He that plays the king, shall be welcome, his majesty shall have tribute of me: the adventurous knight shall use his foil, and target: the lover shall not sigh gratis; the humorous man shall end his part in peace: [the clown shall make those laugh, whose lungs are tickled o' the sere³⁷;] and the lady shall say her mind freely, or the blank verse shall halt for't. —What players are they?

Ros. Even those you were wont to take such delight in, the tragedians of the city.

³⁵ i. e. short and spare. See Twelfth Night, Act i. Sc. 5, p. 364, note 3.

³⁶ To cote is to pass alongside, to pass by:—

"Marry, presently coted and outstript them."

Return from Parnassus.

"With that Hippomenes coted her."

Golding's Ovid, Metam. ii.

It was a familiar hunting term, and its origin from à côté, French, is obvious.

³⁷ The first quarto reads:—"The clown shall make them laugh that are tickled in the lungs." The words as they now stand are in the folio. The meaning appears to be, the clown shall make even those laugh whose lungs are tickled with a dry cough, or huskiness; by his merriment shall convert even their coughing into laughter. The same expression occurs in Howard's Defensative against the Poyson of supposed Prophecies, 1620, folio:—"Discovering the moods and humours of the vulgar sort to be so loose and tickle of the seare."

Ham. How chances it, they travel³⁸? their residence, both in reputation and profit, was better both ways.

Ros. I think, their inhibition comes by the means of the late innovation.

Ham. Do they hold the same estimation they did when I was in the city? Are they so followed?

Ros. No, indeed, they are not.

Ham. How comes it? Do they grow rusty?

Ros. Nay, their endeavour keeps in the wonted pace: But there is, sir, an eyry³⁹ of children, little eyases⁴⁰, that cry out on the top of question⁴¹, and

³⁸ In the first quarto copy this passage stands thus:—

“Ham. How comes it that they travel? do they grow restie?

Gil. No, my lord, their reputation holds as it was wont.

Ham. How then?

Gil. I’ faith, my lord, novelty carries it away, for the principal publike audience that came to them, are turned to private plays, and to the humour of children.”

By this we may understand what Hamlet means in saying “their inhibition comes of the late innovation,” i. e. “their prevention or hindrance comes from the late innovation of companies of juvenile performers, as the children of the revels, the children of St. Paul’s,” &c. They have not relaxed in their endeavours to please, but this (brood) aiery of little children are now the fashion, and have so abused the common stages as to deter many from frequenting them. Thus in Jack Drum’s Entertainment, or Pasquil and Catherine, 1601:—

“I sawe the children of Powles last night,
And troth they pleased me prettie prettie well,
The apes in time will do it handsomely.

Pla. I’ faith,
I like the audience that frequenteth there
With much applause: a man shall not be chokt
With the stench of garlick, nor be pasted
To the barmy jacket of a beer-brewer.

“Bra. ’Tis a good gentle audience, and I hope
The boys will come one day in great request.”

³⁹ i. e. a brood. See note on King Richard III. Act i. Sc. 3, p. 414.

⁴⁰ i. e. young nestlings; properly young unfledged hawks.

⁴¹ Question is speech, conversation. The meaning may therefore be, they cry out on the top of their voice.

are most tyrannically clapp'd for't: these are now the fashion; and so berattle the common stages (so they call them), that many, wearing rapiers, are afraid of goose quills, and dare scarce come thither.

Ham. What! are they children? who maintains 'em? how are they escoted⁴²? Will they pursue the quality⁴³, no longer than they can sing? will they not say afterwards, if they should grow themselves to common players (as it is most like, if their means are no better,) their writers do them wrong, to make them exclaim against their own succession?

Ros. 'Faith, there has been much to do on both sides; and the nation holds it no sin, to tarre⁴⁴ them to controversy: there was, for a while, no money bid for argument, unless the poet and the player went to cuffs in the question.

Ham. Is't possible?

Guil. O, there has been much throwing about of brains.

Ham. Do the boys carry it away?

Ros. Ay, that they do, my lord; Hercules and his load too⁴⁵.

⁴² i. e. paid, from the Fr. escot, a shot or reckoning.

⁴³ Quality, i. e. profession. Mr. Gifford has remarked that "this word seems more peculiarly appropriated to the profession of a player by our old writers." But in Measure for Measure, Angelo, when the Bawd and Tapster are brought before him, inquires what quality they are of. In the Two Gentlemen of Verona, the Outlaws speak of men of our quality. And Sir Thomas Eliot, in his Platonic Dialogue, 1534:—"According to the profession or qualitee, wherein men have opinion that wisdom doth rest, so ought to be the forme of livinge, countenance, and gesture." He is speaking of philosophers.

No longer than they can sing, i. e. no longer than they keep the voices of boys, and sing in the choir.

⁴⁴ i. e. set them on, a phrase borrowed from the setting on a dog. Thus in King John, Act iv. Sc. 1:—

"Like a dog that is compelled to fight,

Snatch at his master that doth tarre him on."

⁴⁵ i. e. carry all the world before them: there is perhaps an allu

Ham. It is not very strange : for my uncle is King of Denmark, and those, that would make mowes⁴⁶ at him while my father lived, give twenty, forty, fifty, an hundred ducats a-piece, for his picture in little. 'Sblood, there is something in this more than natural, if philosophy could find it out.

[Flourish of Trumpets within.

Guil. There are the players.

Ham. Gentlemen, you are welcome to Elsinore. Your hands. Come then : the appurtenance of welcome is fashion and ceremony : let me comply⁴⁷ with you in this garb ; lest my extent to the players, which, I tell you, must show fairly outward, should more appear like entertainment than yours. You are wel-sion to the Globe theatre, the sign of which is said to have been Héracles carrying the globe.

⁴⁶ So the folio. First quarto, mops and moes." The other quartos mouths.

⁴⁷ Let me comply with you in this garb. Hanmer, with his usual temerity, changed comply to compliment, and Steevens has contented himself with saying that he means "to compliment with," here and in a passage in the fifth act, "He did comply with his dug before he sucked it," where that sense would be even more absurd. Hamlet has received his old schoolfellows with somewhat of the coldness of suspicion hitherto, but he now remembers that this is not courteous : He therefore rouses himself to give them a proper reception, "Gentlemen, you are welcome to Elsinore.—Your hands. Come then, the appurtenance of welcome is fashion and ceremony : let me EMBRACE you in this fashion. lest I should seem to give you a less courteous reception than I give the players, to whom I must behave with at least exterior politeness." That to comply with was to embrace will appear from the following passages in Herrick :—

"Witty Ovid, by

Whom fair Corinna sits, and doth comply,
With iv'ry wrists, his laureat head, and steeps
His eye in dew of kisses, while he sleeps."

Again :—

"A rug of carded wool
Which, sponge-like, drinking in the dull
Light of the moon, seem'd to comply,
Cloud-like the dainty deity."

come : but my uncle-father, and aunt-mother, are deceived.

Guil. In what, my dear lord ?

Ham. I am but mad north-north west ; when the wind is southerly, I know a hawk from a hand-saw⁴⁸.

Enter POLONIUS.

Pol. Well be with you, gentlemen !

Ham. Hark you, Guildenstern ;—and you too ;—at each ear a hearer : that great baby, you see there, is not yet out of his swaddling-clouts.

Ros. Haply, he's the second time come to them ; for, they say, an old man is twice a child.

Ham. I will prophesy : he comes to tell me of the players ; mark it.—You say right, sir : o' Monday morning ; 'twas then, indeed.

Pol. My lord, I have news to tell you.

Ham. My lord, I have news to tell you ; When Roscius was an actor in Rome,——

Pol. The actors are come hither, my lord.

Ham. Buz, buz !

Pol. Upon my honour,——

Ham. “ Then came each actor on his ass,”——

Pol. The best actors in the world, either for tragedy, comedy, history, pastoral, pastoral-comical, historical-pastoral [tragical-historical, tragical-comical-historical-pastoral]⁴⁹, scene individable, or poem unlimited :—Seneca cannot be too heavy, nor Plautus too light. For the law of writ⁵⁰ and the liberty,—these are the only men.

⁴⁸ The original form of this proverb was undoubtedly “To know a hawk from a hernshaw,” that is, to know a hawk from the heron which it pursues. There is an old Italian proverb : “Saper discernere i Tordi da Stornelli,” for to know one thing from another. The corruption is said to be as old as the time of Shakespeare.

⁴⁹ The words within crotchets are not in the quartos, except the first of 1603.

⁵⁰ The quarto of 1603 reads, “for the law hath writ.” The

Ham. "O Jephthah, judge of Israel,"—what a treasure hadst thou!

Pol. What a treasure had he, my lord?

Ham. Why—"One fair daughter, and no more,
The which he loved passing well"⁵¹.

Pol. Still on my daughter. [Aside.

Ham. Am I not i' the right, old Jephthah?

Pol. If you call me Jephthah, my lord, I have a daughter, that I love passing well.

Ham. Nay, that follows not.

Pol. What follows then, my lord?

Ham. Why, "As by lot, God wot," and then, you know, "It came to pass, As most like it was,"—The first row of the pious chanson⁵² will show you more; for look, where my abridgment⁵³ comes.

Enter Four or Five Players.

You are welcome, masters; welcome, all:—I am glad to see thee well:—welcome, good friends.—O, old friend! Why, thy face is valanc'd⁵⁴ since I saw thee last; Com'st thou to beard me in Denmark?—What! my young lady and mistress! By-'r-lady, your lady-sense intended is evidently that the players could adhere to the part written for them, or depart from it and extemporize.

⁵¹ An imperfect copy of this ballad, of "Jephtha, Judge of Israel," was given to Dr. Percy by Steevens. See Reliques, ed. 1794, vol. i. p. 189. There is a more correct copy in Evans's Old Ballads, vol. i. p. 7, ed. 1810.

⁵² Pons chanson is the reading of the first folio; three of the quartos read pious; and the newly discovered quarto of 1603, "the godly ballad;" which puts an end to controversy upon the subject. The first row is the first column. The form of these old carols and ballads is well known.

⁵³ The folio reads, "abridgments come." Abridgment was used to signify a dramatic performance, as in Midsummer Night's Dream, Act v. Sc. 1:—

"Say what abridgment have you for this evening."

Hamlet has afterwards termed the players, "the abstracts and brief chronicles of the time."

⁵⁴ Valanc'd, i. e. f-inged with a beard. The folio misprints it valiant.

ship is nearer to heaven, than when I saw you last, by the altitude of a chopine⁵⁵. 'Pray God, your voice, like a piece of uncurrent gold, be not cracked within the ring⁵⁶.—Masters, you are all welcome. We'll e'en to't like French falconers, fly at any thing we see : We'll have a speech straight : Come, give us a taste of your quality ; come, a passionate speech.

1 Play. What speech, my lord ?

⁵⁵ A chopine, a kind of high shoe, or rather clog, worn by the Spanish and Italian ladies, and adopted at one time as a fashion by the English. Coriate describes those worn by the Venetians as some of them "half a yard high." Bulwer, in his Artificial Changeling, complains of this fashion, as a monstrous affectation, "wherein our ladies imitate the Venetian and Persian ladies." That the fashion was originally of oriental origin seems very probable : there is a figure of a Turkish lady with chopines in Sandy's Travels ; and another of a Venetian courtesan in the Habiti Antichi, &c. di Cesare Vecellio. The annexed cut is reduced from one in Mr. Douce's Illustrations, copied from a real Venetian chopine.

Chapin is the Spanish name ; and Cobarruvias countenances honest Tom Coriate's account of the preposterous height to which some ladies carried them. He tells an old tale of their being invented to prevent women's gadding, being first made of wood, and very heavy ; and that the ingenuity of the women overcame this inconvenience by substituting cork. Though they are mentioned under the name of cioppini by those who saw them in use in Venice, the dictionaries record them under the title of zoccoli. Cobarruvias asserts that they were made of zapino (deal) in Italy, and not of cork ; and hence their name. But the Spanish doctors differ about the etymology. Perhaps Hamlet may have some allusion to the boy having grown so as to fill the place of a tragedy heroine, and so assumed the cothurnus ; which Puttenham described as "high corked shoes, or pantofles, which now they call in Spaine and Italy shoppini."

⁵⁶ The old gold coin was thin and liable to crack. There was a ring or circle on it, within which the sovereign's head, &c. was placed ; if the crack extended beyond this ring, it was rendered uncurrent : it was therefore a simile applied to any other debased or injured object. There is some humour in applying it to a cracked voice.

Ham. I heard thee speak me a speech once, but it was never acted; or, if it was, not above once: for the play, I remember, pleased not the million⁵⁷; 'twas caviare to the general⁵⁸: but it was (as I received it, and others, whose judgements, in such matters, cried in the top of mine), an excellent play: well digested in the scenes, set down with as much modesty as cunning. I remember, one said, there were no sallies in the lines⁵⁹, to make the matter savoury: nor no matter in the phrase, that might indite the author of affectation⁶⁰; but called it, an honest method, [as wholesome as sweet, and by very much more hand-

⁵⁷ The quarto of 1603 reads vulgar.

⁵⁸ " 'Twas caviare to the general." Caviare is said to be the pickled roes of certain fish of the sturgeon kind, called in Italy caviale, and much used there and in other Catholic countries. Great quantities were prepared on the river Volga formerly. As a dish of high seasoning and peculiar flavour it was not relished by the many, i. e. the general. A fantastic fellow, described in Jonson's Cynthia's Revels, is said to be learning to eat macaroni, periwinkles, French beans, and caviare, and pretending to like them.

⁵⁹ Thus the old copy. Pope reads salt, which was probably intended. "Sal. Salte, a pleasante and mery word, that maketh folke to laugh, and sometimes pricketh."—Baret.

⁶⁰ The poet has probably put into the mouth of Hamlet his own genuine opinion of this speech, and the play from whence it was derived; whether it was one of his own juvenile performances, or one of those inform dramas which he had polished, it is now vain to inquire. There are words and passages which were evidently coined in his mint.

Schlegel considers it as one example of the many niceties of Shakespeare which have never been understood. He observes, that "this speech must not be judged by itself, but in connexion with the place where it is introduced. To distinguish it as dramatic poetry in the play itself, it was necessary that it should rise above the dignified poetry of that in the same proportion that the theatrical elevation does above simple nature. Hence Shakespeare has composed the play in Hamlet altogether in sententious rhymes, full of antithesis. But this solemn and measured tone did not suit a speech in which violent emotion ought to prevail; and the poet had no other expedient than the one of which he made use, overcharging the pathos."

some than fine.]⁶¹ One speech in it I chiefly loved :
'twas Æneas' tale to Dido ; and thereabout of it especially, where he speaks of Priam's slaughter : If it live in your memory, begin at this line ; let me see, let me see ;—

“ The rugged Pyrrhus, like the Hyrcanian beast,” —'tis not so ; it begins with Pyrrhus.

“ The rugged Pyrrhus,—he, whose sable arms,
Black as his purpose, did the night resemble,
When he lay couched in the ominous horse,
Hath now his^a dread and black complexion smear'd
With heraldry more dismal ; head to foot
Now is he total gules ; horridly trick'd⁶²
With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons ;
Bak'd and impasted with the parching streets,
That lend a tyrannous and a damned light
To their lord's murder⁶³ : Roasted in wrath, and fire,
And thus o'er-sized with coagulate gore,
With eyes like carbuncles, the hellish Pyrrhus
Old grandsire Priam seeks ;”—So proceed you.

Pol. 'Fore God, my lord, well spoken ; with good accent, and good discretion.

1 Play. “ Anon he finds him
Striking too short at Greeks ; his antique sword,
Rebellious to his arm, lies where it falls,
Repugnant to command : Unequal match'd,
Pyrrhus at Priam drives ; in rage, strikes wide ;
But with the whiff and wind of his fell sword
The unnerved father falls. Then senseless Ilium,
Seeming to feel this blow, with flaming top
Stoops to his base ; and with a hideous crash

⁶¹ The words in brackets are not in the folio.

^a The old copies have this.

⁶² Gules, i. e. red, in the language of heraldry : to trick is to colour.

“ With man's blood paint the ground ; gules, gules.”

Timon of Athens

⁶³ The folio has “ vile murders.”

Takes prisoner Pyrrhus' ear : for, lo ! his sword
Which was declining on the milky head
Of reverend Priam, seem'd i' the air to stick :
So, as a painted tyrant, Pyrrhus stood ;
And, like a neutral to his will and matter,
Did nothing.

But, as we often see, against some storm,
A silence in the heavens, the rack⁶⁴ stand still,
The bold winds speechless⁶⁵, and the orb below
As hush as death : anon the dreadful thunder
Doth rend the region : So, after Pyrrhus' pause,
A roused vengeance sets him new a-work ;
And never did the Cyclops' hammers fall
On Mars's armour, forg'd for proof eterne,
With less remorse than Pyrrhus' bleeding sword
Now falls on Priam.—

Out, out, thou strumpet, Fortune ! All you gods,
In general synod, take away her power ;
Break all the spokes and fellies from her wheel,
And bowl the round nave down the hill of heaven,
As low as to the fiends !”

Pol. This is too long.

Ham. It shall to the barber's, with your beard.—
'Pr'ythee, say on :—He's for a jig⁶⁶, or a tale of bawdry,

⁶⁴ The rack is the clouds, formed by vaporous exhalation. Johnson has chosen this passage and one in Dryden of the same import to exemplify the word which he explains, “the clouds as they are driven by the winds.”

⁶⁵ “Even as the wind is hush'd before it raineth.”

Venus and Adonis.

⁶⁶ “He's for a jig or a tale of bawdry.” Giga, in Italian, was a fiddle, or crowd ; gigaro, a fiddler, or minstrel. Hence a jig (first written gigge, though pronounced with g soft, after the Italian), was a ballad, or ditty, sung to the fiddle. “Frottola, a country gigge, or round, or country song or wanton verse.” As these itinerant minstrels proceeded, they made it a kind of farcical dialogue ; and at length it came to signify a short merry interlude :—“Farce, the jigg at the end of an enterlude, wherein some pretie knaverie is acted.” There are several of the old bal-or he sleeps:—say on: come to Hecuba.

1 Play. “But who, O! who, had seen the mobled⁶⁷ queen”——

Ham. The mobled queen?

Pol. That’s good; mobled queen, is good.

1 Play. “Run barefoot up and down, threat’ning the flames

With bisson⁶⁸ rheum; a clout upon that head,
Where late the diadem stood; and, for a robe,
About her lank and all o’er-teemed loins,
A blanket, in the alarm of fear caught up;
Who this had seen, with tongue in venom steep’d,
’Gainst fortune’s state would treason have pronounc’d:
But if the gods themselves did see her then,
When she saw Pyrrhus make malicious sport
In mincing with his sword her husband’s limbs;
The instant burst of clamour that she made (Unless things mortal move them not at all),
Would have made milch⁶⁹ the burning eyes of heaven,
And passion in the gods.”

lads and dialogues called Jigs in the Harleian Collection. Thus also in The Fatal Contract, by Hemings:—

“We’ll hear your jigg,

How is your ballad titled.”

⁶⁷ The folio reads inobled, an evident error of the press; for mobled, which means muffled. The queen is represented with “a clout upon her head and a blanket wrapt round her, caught up in the alarm of fear.” We have the word in Ogilby’s Fables:—

“Mobbled nine days in my considering cap.”

And in Shirley’s Gentleman of Venice:—

“The moon doth mobble up herself.”

⁶⁸ Bisson is blind; bijren, A. S. Bisson rheum is therefore blind-ing tears. In Coriolanus we have, “Bisson conspecuities.”

⁶⁹ “Would have made milch the burning eye of heaven.” By a hardy poetical license this expression means, “Would have filled with tears the burning eye of heaven.” We have “Lemosus, milch-hearted,” in Huloet’s and in Lyttleton’s Dictionaries; and Eliot renders lemosi “those that weepe lightly.” It is remarkable that, in old Italian, lattuoso is used for luttuoso, in the same metaphorical manner. To have “made passion in the gods” would have been to move them to sympathy or compassion.

Pol. Look, whether he has not turn'd his colour, and has tears in's eyes⁷⁰.—'Pr'ythee, no more.

Ham. 'Tis well; I'll have thee speak out the rest of this soon.—Good my lord, will you see the players well bestowed? Do you hear, let them be well used; for they are the abstracts, and brief chronicles, of the time: After your death you were better have a bad epitaph, than their ill report while you live.

Pol. My lord, I will use them according to their desert.

Ham. God's bodikins, man, much better: Use every man after his desert, and who should 'scape whipping? Use them after your own honour and dignity: The less they deserve, the more merit is in your bounty. Take them in.

Pol. Come, sirs.

[Exit POLONIUS, with some of the Players.]

Ham. Follow him, friends: we'll hear a play to-morrow.—Dost thou hear me, old friend; can you play the murder of Gonzago?

1 Play. Ay, my lord.

Ham. We'll have it to-morrow night. You could, for a need, study a speech of some dozen or sixteen lines, which I would set down, and insert in't? could you not?

⁷⁰ "The plays of Shakespeare, by their own power, must have given a different turn to acting, and almost new-created the performers of his age. Mysteries, moralities, and interludes afforded no materials for art to work on, no discriminations of character, or varieties of appropriated language. From tragedies like Cambyses, Tamburlaine, and Jeronymo, nature was wholly banished; and the comedies of Gammer Gurton, Comon Condy-cyons, and The Old Wives Tale, might have had justice done to them by the lowest order of human beings.

"Sanctius his animal, mentisque capacius altæ, was wanting when the dramas of Shakespeare made their first appearance; and to these we were certainly indebted for the excellent actors who could never have improved so long as their sensibilities were unawakened, their memories burthened only by pedantic or puritanical declamation, and their manners vulgarised by pleasantry of as low an origin."—Steevens.

1 Play. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Very well.—Follow that lord ; and look you mock him not. [Exit Player.] My good friends [To Ros. and GUIL.] I'll leave you till night : you are welcome to Elsinore.

Ros. Good my lord !

[Exeunt ROSENCRANTZ and GULDENSTERN.

Ham. Ay, so, God b' wi' you :—Now I am alone.
O what a rogue and peasant slave am I !

Is it not monstrous, that this player here,
But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,
Could force his soul so to his own conceit,
That from her working, all his visage wann'd⁷¹ ;
Tears in his eyes, distraction in's aspect,
A broken voice, and his whole function suiting
With forms to his conceit ? And all for nothing !
For Hecuba !

What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,
That he should weep for her ? What would he do,
Had he the motive and the cue⁷² for passion,
That I have ? He would drown the stage with tears,
And cleave the general ear with horrid speech ;
Make mad the guilty, and appal the free,
Confound the ignorant, and amaze, indeed,
The very faculties of eyes and ears.

⁷¹ The folio reads warm'd, which reading Steevens contended for: he was probably moved by a spirit of opposition ; for surely no one can doubt, who considers the context, that wann'd is the poet's word. Indeed I question whether his visage warm'd, for his face suffused, would have entered into the mind of a writer, or the comprehension of a reader or auditor in Shakespeare's time.

⁷² i. e. the hint or prompt word, a technical phrase among players ; literally in French the tail, or last words of the preceding speech, which the actor learns with his own, and watches for as the sign to come in. "A prompter," says Florio, "one who keeps the booke for the plaiers, and teacheth them, or schollers their kue." This will explain why it is used in other places, as in Othello, in the same sense :—

"Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it Without a prompter."

Yet I,

A dull and muddy-mettled rascal, peak^a,
 Like John a-dreams⁷³, unpregnant of my cause,
 And can say nothing; no, not for a king,
 Upon whose property, and most dear life,
 A damn'd defeat⁷⁴ was made. Am I a coward?
 Who calls me villain? breaks my pate across?
 Plucks off my beard, and blows it in my face?
 Tweaks me by the nose? gives me the lie i' the throat,
 As deep as to the lungs? Who does me this?
 Ha!

Why, I should take it: for it cannot be,
 But I am pigeon-liver'd, and lack gall
 To make oppression bitter; or, ere this,
 I should have fatted all the region kites
 With this slave's offal: Bloody, bawdy villain!
 Remorseless, treacherous, lecherous, kindless⁷⁵ villain!
 O vengeance!

Why, what an ass am I? This is most brave;
 That I, the son of a dear father murder'd⁷⁶,

^a To peak, is to mope, to act childishly, foolishly, and with irresolution. So in The Wild-Goose Chase of Beaumont and Fletcher, Act iv. Sc. 3:—"Why stand'st thou here then, Sneaking and peaking, as thou would'st steal linen? Hast thou not place and time?"

⁷³ John a-dreams, or John a droynes, was a common term for any dreaming or droning simpleton. There is a story told of one John a droynes, a Suffolk simpleton, who played the Devil in a stage play, in the Hundred Merry Tales. And there is another foolish character of that name in Whetstone's Promos and Cassandra. A corresponding term John a nods is used by Harsnet in his Declaration of Popish Impostures, p. 160. Unpregnant is not quickened or properly impressed with.

⁷⁴ Defeat here signifies destruction. It was frequently used in the sense of undo or take away by our old writers. Thus Chapman in his Revenge for Honour:—

"That he might meantime make a sure defeat
 On our good aged father's life."

⁷⁵ Kindless is unnatural; we have kindly for natural, i. e. accordance with kind, elsewhere.

⁷⁶ The first folio reads thus:—

seat of passion: funny much.

-refers to Claydon

Prompted to my revenge by heaven and hell,
 Must, like a whore, unpack my heart with words,
 And fall a cursing like a very drab,
 A scullion!
 Fye upon't! foh! About my brains⁷⁷! Humph! I have heard,
 That guilty creatures, sitting at a play⁷⁸,
 Have, by the very cunning of the scene,
 Been struck so to the soul, that presently
 They have proclaim'd their malefactions;
 For murder, though it have no tongue, will speak
 With most miraculous organ. I'll have these players
 Play something like the murder of my father,
 Before mine uncle; I'll observe his looks;
 I'll tent him⁷⁹ to the quick; if he but blench⁸⁰,
 I know my course. The spirit, that I have seen,
 May be a devil: and the devil hath power
 To assume a pleasing shape; yea, and, perhaps,
 Out of my weakness, and my melancholy

“ Oh vengeance!

Who? What an ass am I? I sure this is most brave,
 That I the sonne of the Deere murdered.”

The quarto of 1604 omits “ Oh vengeance,” and reads, “ a deere murdered.” The quarto of 1603, “ that I the son of my dear father.”

⁷⁷ It seems extraordinary that Mason and Steevens could ever conceive that there was any allusion here to the nautical phrase, about ship. “ About my brains” is nothing more than “ to work my brains.” The common phrase, to go about a thing, is not yet obsolete. Falstaff humours the equivocal use of the word in The Merry Wives of Windsor:—“ No quips now, Pistol; indeed I am in the waist too yards about; but I am now about no waste; I am about thrift.” Steevens’s quotation from Heywood’s Iron Age should have taught him better:—

“ My brain about again! for thou hast found
 New projects now to work on.”

⁷⁸ A number of instances of the kind are collected by Thomas Heywood in his Apology for Actors.

⁷⁹ To tent was to probe, to search a wound.

⁸⁰ To blench is to shrink or start. Vide Winter’s Tale, Act i. Sc. 2, p. 22.

ACT III.

SCENE I. A Room in the Castle.

Enter King, Queen, POLONIUS, OPHELIA, ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN.

King.

AND can you, by no drift of conference¹
Get from him why he puts on this confusion;
Grating so harshly all his days of quiet
With turbulent and dangerous lunacy?

Ros. He does confess he feels himself distracted;
But from what cause he will by no means speak.

Guil. Nor do we find him forward to be sounded;
But, with a crafty madness, keeps aloof,
When we would bring him on to some confession
Of his true state.

Queen. Did he receive you well?

Ros. Most like a gentleman.

Guil. But with much forcing of his disposition.

Ros. Niggard of question; but, of our demands,
Most free in his reply².

⁸¹ i. e. more near, more immediately connected. The first quarto reads, "I will have sounder proofs."

² Warburton thought we should read:—

"Most free of question; but of our demands
Niggard in his reply.

And the conjecture is strongly confirmed by the 4to 1603:—

"But still he put us off, and by no means
Would make an answer to that we exposde."

Queen. Did you assay him
To any pastime?

Ros. Madam, it so fell out, that certain players
We o'er-raught³ on the way: of these we told him;
And there did seem in him a kind of joy
To hear of it: They are about the court;
And, as I think, they have already order
This night to play before him.

Pol. 'Tis most true:
And he beseech'd me to entreat your majesties,
To hear and see the matter.

King. With all my heart; and it doth much content me

To hear him so inclin'd.
Good gentlemen, give him a further edge,
And drive his purpose on to these delights.

Ros. We shall, my lord.

[Exeunt ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.]

King. Sweet Gertrude, leave us too:
For we have closely sent for Hamlet hither;
That he, as 'twere by accident, may here
Affront⁴ Ophelia:
Her father, and myself (lawful espials⁵),
Will so bestow ourselves, that, seeing, unseen,
We may of their encounter frankly judge;
And gather by him, as he is behav'd,
If't be the affliction of his love, or no,
That thus he suffers for.

Queen. I shall obey you.—
And, for your part, Ophelia, I do wish,
That your good beauties be the happy cause

³ i. e. reached, overtook.

⁴ i. e. meet her, encounter her; affrontare, Ital. See Winter's Tale, Act v. Sc. 1, vol. iv. p. 108.

⁵ Lawful espials; that is, lawful spies. "An espiall in warres, a scoutwatche, a beholder, a viewer."—Baret. See King Henry VI. Part I. Act i. Sc. 4, p. 26. An espy was also in use for a spy. The two words are only found in the folio.

Of Hamlet's wildness : so shall I hope, your virtues
Will bring him to his wonted way again,
To both your honours.

Oph. Madam, I wish it may.

[Exit Queen.

Pol. Ophelia, walk you here :—Gracious, so please
you,

We will bestow⁶ ourselves :—Read on this book ;

[To OPHELIA.

That show of such an exercise may colour
Your loneliness⁷.—We are oft to blame in this,—
'Tis too much prov'd,—that, with devotion's visage,
And pious action^a, we do sugar o'er
The devil himself.

King. O, 'tis too true !

How smart a lash that speech doth give my conscience !
The harlot's cheek, beautied with plast'ring art,
Is not more ugly to the thing that helps it,
Than is my deed to my most painted word :
O heavy burden !

[Aside.

Pol. I hear him coming ; let's withdraw, my lord.

[Exeunt King and POLONIUS.

Enter HAMLET.

Ham. To be, or not to be, that is the question :—
Whether 'tis nobler in the mind, to suffer
The slings and arrows of outrageous fortune ;
Or to take arms against a sea⁸ of troubles,

⁶ Bestow ourselves, is here used for hide or place ourselves. We have the word in the same sense in a subsequent scene :—

“ Where the dead body is bestow'd, my lord,
We cannot get from him.”

We now use stow. One of our old dictionaries makes a discrimination between the acceptations of this word, thus :—“ To bestow or lay out ; to bestow, or give ; to bestow, or place.”

⁷ The quarto has lowliness.

^a This indicates that it was a book of prayers, which agrees with Hamlet's “ Nymph in their orisons.”

⁸ Thus the old copies. Pope proposed to read a siege, and War-

And, by opposing, end them?—To die,—to sleep,—
 No more ;—and, by a sleep, to say we end
 The heart-ache, and the thousand natural shocks
 That flesh is heir to,—'tis a consummation
 Devoutly to be wish'd. To die ;—to sleep ;—
 To sleep ! perchance to dream ;—ay, there's the rub ;
 For in that sleep of death what dreams may come,
 When we have shuffled off this mortal coil⁹,
 Must give us pause. There's the respect¹⁰,
 That makes calamity of so long life :
 For who would bear the whips and scorns of time¹¹, burton, assail. That the word was assay, which was easily mistaken for a sea, and which was used in the same sense as assail, I have no doubt. Thus in the first part of King Henry IV. Act v. Sc. 4.

“ I will assay thee so defend thyself.”

And in Act ii. Sc. 2 of this play :—

“ To give th'assay of arms against your majesty.”

Numerous instances might be adduced of the use of the word in this sense in the poet's time. Thus :—

“ Yf Bevis of Hampton, Colburne & Guy
 Will thee assaye, set not by them a flye.”

A New Enterlude called Thersites.

⁹ This mortal coil ; that is, “ the tumult and bustle of this life.” It is remarkable that under garbuglio, which has the same meaning in Italian as our coil, Florio has “ a pecke of troubles ;” of which Shakespeare's “ sea of troubles” may be only an aggrandized idea.

¹⁰ i. e. the consideration. This is Shakespeare's most usual sense of the word.

¹¹ Time, for the time, is a very usual expression with our old writers. Thus in Ben Jonson's Every Man out of his Humour :

“ Oh, how I hate the monstrousness of time.”

In Cardanus' Comforte by Thomas Bedingfield, 1599, is a description of the miseries of life strongly resembling that in the text :—“ Hunger, thirste, sleape not plentiful or quiet as deade men have, heate in somer, colde in winter, disorder of tyme, terroure of warres, controlment of parents, cares of wedlocke, studye for children, slouthe of servaunts, contention of sutes, and that which is most of all, the condycyon of tyme wherein honestye is disdayned as folye, and crafte is honoured as wisdom.”

In the 4to, 1603, this soliloquy occurs in an earlier scene, and is immediately preceded by the king's remark “ See where he comes poring upon a book.” The poet therefore meant it as re-

Th'oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely¹²,
 The pangs of dispriz'd love, the law's delay,
 The insolence of office, and the spurns
 That patient merit of th'unworthy takes,
 When he himself might his quietus¹³ make
 With a bare bodkin¹⁴? who would fardels¹⁵ bear,
 To grunt¹⁶ and sweat under a weary life;
 But that the dread of something after death,—
 The undiscover'd country, from whose bourn¹⁷
 No traveller returns,—puzzles the will;
 And makes us rather bear those ills we have,
 Than fly to others that we know not of?
 Thus conscience does make cowards of us all¹⁸;

flections upon what he had been reading, and Mr. Hunter thinks from some other passages which he cites that this very book of Cardanus' Comferte was in Shakespeare's mind, and by him placed in the hands of Hamlet. The book was first published in 1573.

¹² The folio has "the poor man's contumely," and in the next line the quartos have despised.

¹³ The allusion is to the term quietus est, used in settling accounts at exchequer audits. Thus Webster in his Dutchess of Malfy :—

"You had the trick in audit time to be sick, Till I had sign'd your quietus."

And more appositely, in Sir Thomas Overbury's character of a Franklin :—"Lastly to end him, he cares not when his end comes; he needs not feare his audit, for his quietus is in heaven."

¹⁴ "Bodkin was the ancient term for a small dagger." See note 11, p. 232.

¹⁵ Fardels, i. e. packs, burdens. The folio has "these fardels."

¹⁶ Though to grunt has been degraded in modern language, it appears to have conveyed no vulgar or low image to the ear of our ancestors, as many quotations from the old translations of the classics would show. "Loke that the places about thee be so in silence that thy corage and mynde gronte nor groudge nat." Paynel's Translation of Erasmus de Contempt. Mundi. The fact seems to be, that to groan and to grunt were convertible terms. "Swyne wode for love groyneth."—Horman's Vulgaria. And Chaucer in the Monk's Tale :—

"But never gront he at no stroke but on."

¹⁷ Mr. Douce points out the following passages in Cranmer's Bible, which may have been in Shakespeare's mind :—"Afore I goe thither, from whence I shall not turne againe, even to the lande

And thus the native hue of resolution
 Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought ;
 And enterprizes of great pith¹⁹ and moment,
 With this regard, their currents turn awry²⁰,
 And lose the name of action.—Soft you, now !
 The fair Ophelia :—Nymph, in thy orisons²¹
 Be all my sins remember'd.

Oph. Good my lord,

How does your honour for this many a day ?

Ham. I humbly thank you ; well, well, well.

Oph. My lord, I have remembrances of yours,
 That I have longed long to re-deliver ;
 I pray you now receive them.

Ham. No, not I^a ;

I never gave you aught.

Oph. My honour'd lord, you know right well, you lande and deadly shadow whereas is no order, but terrible feare as in the darknesse."—Job x. "The way that I must goe is at hande, but whence I shall not turne againe."—Ib. xvi.

"Weep not for Mortimer,

That scorns the world, and as a traveller
 Goes to discover countries yet unknown."

Marlowe's King Edward II.

¹⁸ "I'll not meddle with it,—it makes a man a coward."—*King
 Richard III.* Act i. Sc. 4. And again:—

"O coward conscience, how dost thou afflict me."

Ib. Act v. Sc. 3

¹⁹ The quartos have pitch.

²⁰ The folio has away.

²¹ "This is a touch of nature. Hamlet at the sight of Ophelia, does not immediately recollect that he is to personate madness, but makes an address grave and solemn, such as the foregoing meditation excited in his thoughts."—Johnson.

^a The folio has "No, no," and in the next line "I know." Two lines lower it misprints then for their, and left for lost.

There, my lord.

Ham. Ha, ha! are you honest? - honest

Oph. My lord?

Ham. Are you fair? beauty fair

Oph. What means your lordship?

Ham. That if you be honest, and fair, your honesty should admit no discourse to your beauty²².

Oph. Could beauty, my lord, have better commerce than with honesty?

Ham. Ay, truly; for the power of beauty will sooner transform honesty from what it is to a bawd, than the force of honesty can translate beauty into his likeness; this was some time a paradox, but now the time gives it proof. I did love you once.

Oph. Indeed, my lord, you made me believe so.

Ham. You should not have believed me; for virtue cannot so inoculate our old stock, but we shall relish of it: I loved you not.

Oph. I was the more deceived.

Ham. Get thee to a nunnery; Why would'st thou be a breeder of sinners? I am myself indifferent honest; but yet I could accuse me of such things, that it were better, my mother had not borne me: I am very proud, revengeful, ambitious; with more offences at my beck, than I have thoughts to put them in²³, imagination to give them shape, or time to act them in. What should such fellows as I do crawling between earth and heaven! We are arrant knaves, all; believe none of us: Go thy ways to a nunnery. Where's your father?

Oph. At home, my lord. (a lie)

²² The meaning appears to be that "honesty may be corrupted by flattering discourse addressed to beauty." Hamlet remarks respecting women generally. The first quarto reads:—"Your beauty should admit no discourse to your honesty." That of 1604:—"You should admit no discourse to your beauty."

²³ "Than I have thoughts to put them in." To put "a thing into thought" is "to think on it."

Ham. Let the doors be shut upon him ; that he may play the fool no where²⁴ but in's own house. Farewell.

Oph. O, help him, you sweet heavens !

Ham. If thou dost marry, I'll give thee this plague for thy dowry : Be thou as chaste as ice, as pure as snow, thou shalt not escape calumny. Get thee to a nunnery ; farewell²⁵ : Or, if thou wilt needs marry, marry a fool ; for wise men know well enough, what monsters you make of them. To a nunnery, go ; and quickly too. Farewell.

Oph. Heavenly powers, restore him !

Ham. I have heard of your paintings²⁶ too, well enough ; God hath given you one face, and you make yourselves another : you jig, you amble, and you lisp, and nickname God's creatures, and make your wantonness your ignorance²⁷ ; Go to ; I'll no more of it : it hath made me mad. I say, we will have no more marriages : those that are married already, all but one, shall live ; the rest shall keep as they are. To a nunnery, go. [Exit HAMLET.]

Oph. O, what a noble mind is here o'erthrown !
The courtier's, scholar's, soldier's eye, tongue, sword²⁸ :
The expectancy and rose of the fair state,
The glass of fashion, and the mould of form²⁹,
The observ'd of all observers ! quite, quite down !
And I, of ladies most deject and wretched,
That suck'd the honey of his musick vows,

²⁴ The folio has way.

²⁵ The folio has " Go, farewell."

²⁶ The folio, " for paintings has prattlings ; and for face has pace.

²⁷ " You mistake by wanton affectation, and pretend to mistake by ignorance."

²⁸ The words soldier's and scholar's are transposed in the folios, but the 4to, 1603, authorises the necessary change.

²⁹ " Speculum consuetudinis."—Cicero. The model by whom all endeavoured to form themselves.

Now see that noble and most sovereign reason,
 Like sweet bells jangled, out of tune³⁰ and harsh;
 That unmatch'd form and feature of blown youth,
 Blasted with ecstasy³¹: O, woe is me!
 To have seen what I have seen, see what I see!

Re-enter King and POLONIUS.

King. Love! his affections do not that way tend;
 Nor what he spake, though it lack'd form a little,
 Was not like madness. There's something in his soul,
 O'er which his melancholy sits on brood;
 And, I do doubt, the hatch, and the disclose³²,
 Will be some danger: Which for to prevent,
 I have, in quick determination,
 Thus set it down. He shall with speed to England,
 For the demand of our neglected tribute:
 Haply, the seas, and countries different,
 With variable objects, shall expel
 This something-settled matter in his heart;
 Whereon his brains still beating, puts him thus
 From fashion of himself. What think you on't?

Pol. It shall do well: But yet, do I believe,
 The origin and commencement of his grief
 Sprung from neglected love.—How now, Ophelia?

³⁰ "What is meant by jangled," says Mr. Hunter, "will appear from what Joshua Poole says in his Lines addressed to his Scholars prefixed to his English Parnassus, 1657:

"Though whetstones cannot cut at all, they may
 Do service, and make knives as sharp as they,
 Themselves are blunt; and they who cannot ring
 By jangling may toll better ringers in."

³¹ Ecstasy, i. e. alienation of mind. Vide the Tempest, Act iii. Sc. 3.

³² To disclose was the ancient term for hatching birds of any kind; from the French, esclos, and that from the Latin, exclusus. I believe to exclude is now the technical term. Thus in the Boke of St. Albans, ed. 1496:—"For to speke of hawkes; Fyrst they ben egges, and afterwarde they ben dysclosed hawkys." And "comynly goshawkes ben disclosyd assoone as the choughs."

You need not tell us what lord Hamlet said ;
 We heard it all.—My lord, do as you please ;
 But, if you hold it fit after the play,
 Let his queen mother all alone entreat him
 To show his griefs ; let her be round³³ with him ,
 And I'll be plac'd, so please you, in the ear
 Of all their conference : If she find him not,
 To England send him ; or confine him, where Your wisdom best shall think.

King. It shall be so :
 Madness in great ones must not unwatch'd go.
 [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A Hall in the same.

Enter HAMLET, and certain Players.

Ham. Speak the speech, I pray you, as I pronounc'd it to you, trippingly on the tongue : but if you mouth it, as many of our players do, I had as lief the town crier spoke my lines¹. Nor do not saw the air too much with your hand, thus ; but use all gently : for in the very torrent, tempest, and (as I may say) whirlwind of your passion, you must acquire and beget a temperance, that may give it smoothness. O ! it offends me to the soul, to hear a robustious periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings² : who, for the most part, are capable of nothing but inexplicable dumb shows, and noise: I would^a have such a fellow whipped for o'er-doing Termagant³; it out-herods Herod: 'Pray you, avoid it.

³³ See note 19 on Act ii. Sc. 2, p. 181.

² The first quarto reads, "of the ignorant." Our ancient theatres were far from the commodious elegant structures which later times have seen. The pit was, truly what its name denotes, an unfloored space in the area of the house, sunk considerably beneath the level of the stage ; and, by ancient representations, one may judge that it was necessary to elevate the head very much

to get a view of the performance. Hence this part of the audience were called groundlings. Jonson, in the Induction to Bartholomew Fair, calls them "the understanding gentlemen of the ground;" and Shirley, "grave understanders."

"No shows, no dance, and what you most delight in, Grave understanders, here's no target-fighting."

Sir W. Cornwallis calls the ignorant earthlings. "I have not been ashamed to adventure mine eares with a ballad-singer,—the profit to see earthlings satisfied with such coarse stuffe," &c.—Essay 15, ed. 1623.

^a The folio has could.

³ Termagaunt is the name given in old romances to the tempestuous god of the Saracens. He is usually joined with Mahound or Mahomet. Hall mentions him in his first Satire:—

"Nor fright the reader with the Pagan vaunt
Of mighty Mahound and great Termagaunt."

Dr. Percy and Dr. Johnson, misled by the etymology given by Junius, have made a Saracen divinity of Termagant; and Mr. Gifford inclines to this opinion in a note on Massinger's Renegado, Act i. Sc. 1. It appears more probable that our old writers borrowed it from the Tervagant of the French, or the Trivigante of the Italian Romances. A learned foreigner has said "Trivigante, whom the predecessors of Ariosto always couple with Apollino, is really Diana Trivia, the sister of the classical Apollo, whose worship, and the lunar sacrifices which it demanded, had been always preserved among the Scythians." Quarterly Review vol. xxi. p. 515.—May we not rather imagine that the Hermes Trismegistus is the deity meant; for Trimegisto and Termegisto are also names of this Termagaunt?

Davenant has given the same etymology of Termagant, Ter magnus, i. e. Τρισμέγιστος. And resolute John Florio calls him "Termigisto, a great boaster, quarreller, killer, tamer or ruler of the universe; the child of the earthquake and of the thunder, the brother of death."—World of Words, 1611. Hence this personage was introduced into the old mysteries and moralities as a demon of outrageous and violent demeanour; or as Bale says, "Termagauntes altogether, and very devils incarnate:" and again, "this terrible Termagaunt, this Nero, this Pharaoh." A tyrant was always "a part to tear a cat in."—The murder of the innocents was a favourite subject for a mystery; and wherever Herod is introduced, he plays the part of a vaunting braggart, a tyrant of tyrants, and does indeed outdo Termagant.

1 Play. I warrant your honour.

Ham. Be not too tame neither, but let your own discretion be your tutor : suit the action to the word, the word to the action : with this special observance, that you o'erstep not the modesty of nature : for any thing so overdone is from the purpose of playing, whose end, both at the first, and now, was, and is, to hold, as 'twere, the mirror up to nature ; to show virtue her own feature, scorn her own image, and the very age and body of the time, his form and pressure. Now this, overdone, or come tardy off, though it make the unskilful laugh, cannot but make the judicious grieve ; the censure of which one, must, in your allowance, o'erweigh a whole theatre of others. O ! there be players, that I have seen play,—and heard others praise, and that highly,—not to speak it profanely, that, neither having the accent of Christians, nor the gait of Christian, pagan, nor man⁴, have so strutted, and bellowed, that I have thought some of nature's journeymen had made men, and not made them well, they imitated humanity so abominably.

1 Play. I hope, we have reform'd that indifferently with us, Sir.

Ham. O, reform it altogether. And let those, that play your clowns, speak no more than is set down for them : for there be of them, that will themselves laugh, to set on some quantity of barren spectators to laugh too ; though, in the mean time, some necessary question⁵ of the play be then to be considered : that's ⁴ The folio has Norman. The quarto, 1603, "the gait of Christian, Pagan, or Turk;" which made Farmer suppose that Musulman was intended.

⁵ The quarto, 1603, "Point in the play then to be observed." Afterwards is added, "And then you have some again that keeps one suit of jests, as a man is known by one suit of apparel ; and gentlemen quote his jests down in their tables before they come to the play, as thus :—Cannot you stay till I eat my porridge ; and yo. owe me a quarter's wages ; and your beer is sour ; and blab-villainous; and shows a most pitiful ambition in the fool that uses it. Go, make you ready.—

[Exeunt Players.]

Enter POLONIUS, ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN.

How now, my lord? will the king hear this piece of work?

Pol. And the queen too, and that presently.

Ham. Bid the players make haste.—

[Exit POLONIUS.]

Will you two help to hasten them?

Both. We will, my lord.

[Exeunt ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.]

Ham. What, ho; Horatio!

Enter HORATIO.

Hor. Here, sweet lord, at your service.

Ham. Horatio, thou art e'en as just a man
As e'er my conversation cop'd withal.

Hor. O, my dear lord,—

Ham. Nay, do not think I flatter
For what advancement may I hope from thee,
That no revenue hast, but thy good spirits,
To feed, and clothe thee? Why should the poor be flatter'd?

No, let the candied tongue lick absurd pomp;
And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee,
Where thrift may follow fawning⁶. Dost thou hear?

bering with his lips: And thus keeping in his cinque a pace of jests; when, God knows, the warme Clown cannot make a jest unless by chance, as the blind man catcheth a hare: Masters, tell him of it."—This passage was evidently levelled at the particular folly of some injudicious player contemporary with the poet.

⁶ Thus the quartos. The folio has faining. Two lines above it has like for lick, and in the next line "my choice" for "her choice."

Since my dear soul was mistress of her choice,
 And could of men distinguish; her election
 Hath seal'd thee for herself: for thou hast been
 (As one, in suffering all, that suffers nothing;)
 A man, that fortune's buffets and rewards
 Hast ta'en with equal thanks: and bless'd are those,
 Whose blood and judgement are so well co-mingled,
 That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger
 To sound what stop she please. Give me that man
 That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him
 In my heart's core, ay, in my heart of heart,
 As I do thee.—Something too much of this.—
 There is a play to-night before the king;
 One scene of it comes near the circumstance,
 Which I have told thee of my father's death.
 I pr'ythee, when thou seest that act afoot,
 Even with the very comment of thy soul⁷
 Observe mine uncle: if his occulted guilt
 Do not itself unkennel in one speech,
 It is a damned ghost that we have seen;
 And my imaginations are as foul
 As Vulcan's stithy⁸. Give him heedful note:
 For I mine eyes will rivet to his face⁹;
 And, after, we will both our judgements join
 In censure¹⁰ of his seeming.

Hor.

Well, my lord:

⁷ Here the folio reads, "my soul," which Mr. Knight and Mr. Collier both follow and defend.

⁸ Vulcan's stithy is Vulcan's workshop or smithy; stith being an anvil.

⁹ Here the first quarto has:—

"And if he do not blench and change at that,
 It is a damned ghost that we have seen;
 Horatio, have a care, observe him well.

Hor. My lord, mine eyes shall still be on his face,
 And not the smallest alteration
 That shall appear in him, but I shall note it."

¹⁰ i. e. judgement, opinion. The folio has "To censure."

If he steal aught, the whilst this play is playing,
And scape detecting, I will pay the theft.

Ham. They are coming to the play; I must be idle :
Get you a place.

Danish March. A Flourish. Enter King, Queen, POLONIUS, OPHELIA, ROSENCRANTZ, GUIL-DENSTERN, and Others.

King. How fares our cousin Hamlet ?

Ham. Excellent, i' faith ; of the chameleon's dish :
I eat the air, promise-cramm'd ; You cannot feed capons so.

King. I have nothing with this answer, Hamlet ;
these words are not mine.

Ham. No, nor mine now.—My lord, you play'd once i' the university, you say ? [To POLONIUS.

Pol. That did I, my lord ; and was accounted a good actor.

Ham. And what did you enact ?

Pol. I did enact Julius Cæsar : I was kill'd i' the Capitol ; Brutus kill'd me¹¹.

Ham. It was a brute part of him, to kill so capital a calf there.—Be the players ready ?

Ros. Ay, my lord ; they stay¹² upon your patience.

¹¹ A Latin play on the subject of Cæsar's death was performed at Christ Church, in Oxford, in 1582. Malone thinks that there was an English play on the same subject previous to Shakespeare's. Cæsar was killed in Pompey's portico, and not in the Capitol : but the error is at least as old as Chaucer's time.

“ This Julius to the Capitolie wente
Upon a day, that he was wont to gon,
And in the Capitolie anon him hente
This false Brutus and his other soon,
And sticked him with bodekins anon
With many a wound,” &c.

Chaucer's Monkes Tale, v. 14621.

I have cited this passage to show that Chaucer uses bodkin for dagger, like Shakespeare. See p. 208.

¹² i. e. “ they wait upon your sufferance or will.” Johnson

Queen. Come hither, my dear Hamlet, sit by me.

Ham. No, good mother, here's metal more attractive.

Pol. O ho! do you mark that? [To the King.]

Ham. Lady, shall I lie in your lap?

[Lying down at OPHELIA'S Feet.]

Oph. No, my lord.

Ham. I mean, my head upon your lap?

Oph. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Do you think, I meant country matters?

Oph. I think nothing, my lord.

Ham. That's a fair thought to lie between maids' legs.

Oph. What is, my lord?

Ham. Nothing.

Oph. You are merry, my lord.

Ham. Who, I?

Oph. Ay, my lord.

Ham. O! your only jig-maker¹³. What should a man do, but be merry? for, look you, how cheerfully my mother looks, and my father died within these two hours.

Oph. Nay, 'tis twice two months, my lord.

Ham. So long? Nay, then let the devil wear black, for I'll have a suit of sables¹⁴. O heavens! die two would have changed the word to pleasure; but Shakespeare has again used it in a similar sense in the Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act iii. Sc. 1:—

“Go,

And think my patience more than thy desert
Is privilege for thy departure hence.”

¹³ See note on Act ii. Sc. 2, p. 198. It may here be added that a jig sometimes signified a sprightly dance, as at present. In addition to the examples before given, take the following from Ford's Love's Sacrifice:—“O Giacompo! Petrarch was a dunce, Dante a jig-maker, Sannazar a goose, and Ariosto a puck-first to me.”—Act ii. Sc. 2.

¹⁴ i. e. a dress, ornamented with the rich fur of that name, said to be the skin of the sable martin. By the statute of apparel, months ago, and not forgotten yet? Then there's hope, a great man's memory may outlive his life half a year: But, by'r-lady, he must build churches then: or else shall he suffer not thinking on, with the hobby-horse¹⁵; whose epitaph is, For O, for O. the hobby-horse is forgot.

Trumpets sound. The Dumb Show¹⁶ follows.

Enter a King and a Queen, very lovingly: the Queen embracing him. She kneels, and makes show of protestation unto him. He takes her up, and declines his head upon her neck: lays him down upon a bank of flowers; she, seeing him asleep, leaves him. Anon comes in a Fellow, takes off his crown, kisses it, and pours poison in the King's ears, and exit. The Queen returns; finds the King dead, and makes passionate action. The Poisoner, with some two or three Mutes, 24 Henry VIII. c. 13, it is ordained that none under the degree of an earl may use sables. Bishop, in his Blossoms, 1577, speaking of extravagance, says, that a thousand ducats were sometimes given for a face of sables. But Hamlet is meant to use the word equivocally.

¹⁵ This is a line of an old ballad; something like it occurs in Weelke's Madrigals, 1608, No. xx. The hobby-horse, whose omission in the morris dance is so pathetically lamented in many of our old dramas, in the very words which Hamlet calls his epitaph, was long a distinguished favourite in the May Games. He was driven from his station by the Puritans, as an impious and Pagan superstition; but restored after the promulgation of the Book of Sports. The hobby-horse was formed of a pasteboard horse's head, and probably a light frame made of wicker-work to form the hinder parts; this was fastened round the body of a man, and covered with a footcloth, which nearly reached the ground, and concealed the legs of the performer; who displayed his antic equestrian skill, and performed various juggling tricks, wigh-hie-ing or neighing, to the no small delight of the bystanders.

¹⁶ This dumb show appears to be superfluous, and even incongruous; for as the murder is there circumstantially represented, the King ought to have been struck with it then, without waiting for the dialogue. Mr. Hunter has shown from an old Diary that it was according to the common practice of the Danish theatre.

comes in again, seeming to lament with her. The dead body is carried away. The Poisoner woos the Queen with gifts; she seems loath and unwilling awhile; but, in the end, accepts his love. [Exeunt.

Oph. What means this, my lord?

Ham. Marry, this is miching *malicho*¹⁷; it means mischief.

Oph. Belike, this show imports the argument of the play.

Enter Prologue.

Ham. We shall know by this fellow: the players cannot keep counsel; they'll tell all.

Oph. Will he tell us what this show meant?

Ham. Ay, or any show that you'll show him: Be not you ashamed to show, he'll not shame to tell you what it means.

Oph. You are naught, you are naught; I'll mark the play.

Pro. *For us, and for our tragedy,
Here stooping to your clemency,
We beg your hearing patiently.*

Ham. Is this a prologue, or the posy of a ring?

Oph. 'Tis brief, my lord.

Ham. As woman's love.

Enter a King and a Queen.

P. King. Full thirty times hath Phœbus' cart¹⁸ gone round

¹⁷ Miching malicho is lurking mischief, or evil doing. To mich, for to skulk, to lurk, was an old English verb in common use in Shakespeare's time; and malicho or malhecho, misdeed, he has borrowed from the Spanish. It is printed in italics in the folios. Many stray words of Spanish and Italian were then affectingly used in common conversation, as we have seen French used in more recent times.

¹⁸ Cart, car, or chariot, were used indiscriminately for any car-

Neptune's salt wash, and Tellus' orb'd ground ;
 And thirty dozen moons, with borrow'd sheen,
 About the world have times twelve thirties been ;
 Since love our hearts, and Hymen did our hands,
 Unite comutual in most sacred bands.

P. Queen. So many journeys may the sun and moon

Make us again count o'er, ere love be done !
 But, woe is me, you are so sick of late,
 So far from cheer, and from your former state,
 That I distrust you. Yet, though I distrust, Discomfort you, my lord, it nothing must :
 For women fear too much, even as they love²⁰ ;
 And women's fear and love hold quantity
 In neither aught, or in extremity.
 Now, what my love is, proof hath made you know ;
 And as my love is siz'd²¹, my fear is so.
 Where love is great, the littlest doubts are fear ;
 Where little fears grow great, great love grows there.

P. King. 'Faith, I must leave thee, love, and shortly too ;

My operant²² powers their functions leave to do ;

riage formerly. Mr. Todd has adduced the following passage from the Comical History of Alphonsus, by R. G. 1599, which, he thinks, Shakespeare meant to burlesque:—

“Thrice ten times Phœbus with his golden beames
 Hath compassed the circle of the skie ;
 Thrice ten times Ceres hath her workemen hir'd,
 And fill'd her barnes with fruteful crops of corne,
 Since first in priesthood I did lead my life.”

²⁰ This line is omitted in the folio. There appears to have been a line omitted in the quarto which should have rhymed to this. The couplet at the close of this speech is not in the folio.

²¹ Cleopatra expresses herself much in the same manner for the loss of Antony:—

“Our size of sorrow
 Proportion'd to our cause, must be as great
 As that which makes it.”

²² i. e. active.

And thou shalt live in this fair world behind,
Honour'd, belov'd ; and, haply, one as kind
For husband shalt thou——

P. Queen. O, confound the rest !
Such love must needs be treason in my breast ;
In second husband let me be accurst !
None wed the second, but who kill'd the first.

Ham. Wormwood, wormwood. [Aside.]

P. Queen. The instances²³, that second marriage
move,
Are base respects of thrift, but none of love ;
A second time I kill my husband dead,
When second husband kisses me in bed.

P. King. I do believe, you think what now you
speak ;

But, what we do determine oft we break.
Purpose is but the slave to memory²⁴ ;
Of violent birth, but poor validity :
Which now, like fruit unripe, sticks on the tree ;
But fall, unshaken, when they mellow be.
Most necessary 'tis, that we forget
To pay ourselves what to ourselves is debt :
What to ourselves in passion we propose,
The passion ending, doth the purpose lose.
The violence of either grief or joy
Their own enactures²⁵ with themselves destroy ;
Where joy most revels, grief doth most lament ;
Grief joys, joy grieves, on slender accident.
This world is not for aye ; nor 'tis not strange,
That even our loves should with our fortunes change ;
For 'tis a question left us yet to prove,
Whether love lead fortune, or else fortune love.

²³ Instances are motives. See note on King Richard III. Act iii. Sc. 2, p. 457.

²⁴ "But thought's the slave of life."—King Henry IV. Part I.

²⁵ i. e. their own determinations, what they enact. The folio has enactore.

The great man down, you mark his favourite flies ;
 The poor advanc'd makes friends of enemies.
 And hitherto doth love on fortune tend :
 For who not needs, shall never lack a friend ;
 And who in want a hollow friend doth try,
 Directly seasons²⁶ him his enemy.
 But, orderly to end where I begun,—
 Our wills and fates, do so contrary run,
 That our devices still are overthrown ;
 Our thoughts are ours, their ends none of our own.
 So think thou wilt no second husband wed ;
 But die thy thoughts, when thy first lord is dead.

P. Queen. Nor earth to me give food, nor heaven light !

Sport and repose lock from me, day and night !
 To desperation turn my trust and hope !
 An anchor's²⁷ cheer in prison be my scope !
 Each opposite, that blanks the face of joy,
 Meet what I would have well, and it destroy !
 Both here, and hence, pursue me lasting strife,
 If, once a widow, ever I be wife !

Ham. If she should break it now.—

[To OPH.

²⁶ See note on Act i. Sc. 3, p. 153. "This quaint phrase," says Steevens, "infests almost every ancient English composition." Why infests? Surely it is as forcible and intelligible as many other metaphorical expressions retained in the language. It has been remarked that our ancestors were much better judges of the powers of language than we are. The Latin writers did not scruple to apply their verb condire in the same manner.

²⁷ Anchor's for anchoret's. Thus in Hall's second Satire, b. iv.—

"Sit seven years pining in an anchor's cheyre,
 To win some patched shreds of minivere."

So little was this archaism understood in 1762, that in a letter from the Hon. C. Yorke to Dr. Birch, about the edition of Lord Bacon's Letters, he says, "I have marked in p. 6 a word blundered in printing: Anchor for Anchoret or Anchorite, (Hermit αναχωρητης.)" This and the preceding line are not in the folio.

P. King. 'Tis deeply sworn. Sweet, leave me here a while ;

My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile
The tedious day with sleep. [Sleeps.

P. Queen. Sleep rock thy brain ;
And never come mischance between us twain ! [Exit.

Ham. Madam, how like you this play ?

Queen. The lady doth protest too much, methinks.

Ham. O, but she'll keep her word.

King. Have you heard the argument ? Is there no offence in't²⁸ ?

Ham. No, no, they do but jest, poison in jest ; no offence i' the world.

King. What do you call the play ?

Ham. The mouse-trap. Marry, how ? Tropically²⁹. This play is the image of a murder done in Vienna : Gonzago is the duke's name³⁰, his wife, Baptista : you shall see anon ; 'tis a knavish piece of work : But what of that ? your majesty, and we that have free souls, it touches us not : Let the galled jade wince, our withers are unwrung.—

Enter LUCIANUS.

This is one Lucianus, nephew to the king.

Oph. You are as good as a chorus³¹, my lord.

²⁸ The King is represented as having been present at the dumb show, and the wonder is that he allowed the play to proceed.

²⁹ The first quarto reads, trapiically. It is evident that a pun was intended.

³⁰ Gonzago is the duke's name, his wife, Baptista. All the old copies read thus. Yet in the dumb show we have, "Enter a King and Queen ;" and at the end of this speech, "Lucianus, nephew to the king." In the quarto, 1603, the character is a duke throughout the play, and when king was to be substituted for duke, this passage escaped correction. Baptista is never used singly by the Italians, being uniformly compounded with Giam and Giovanni. It is needless to remark that it is always the name of a man.

³¹ The use to which Shakespeare put the chorus may be seen

Ham. I could interpret between you and your love, if I could see the puppets dallying.

Oph. You are keen, my lord, you are keen.

Ham. It would cost you a groaning, to take off my edge.

Oph. Still better, and worse.

Ham. So you mistake³² your husbands.—Begin, murderer;—leave thy damnable faces, and begin. Come;—

The croaking raven doth bellow for revenge.

Luc. Thoughts black, hands apt, drugs fit, and time agreeing;

Confederate season, else no creature seeing;

Thou mixture rank, of midnight weeds³³ collected,

With Hecat's ban thrice blasted, thrice infected,

Thy natural magick and dire property,

On wholesome life usurps immediately.

[Pours the Poison into the Sleeper's Ears.]

Ham. He poisons him i' the garden for his estate. His name's Gonzago: the story is extant, and written in very choice Italian: You shall see anon, how the murderer gets the love of Gonzago's wife.

Oph. The king rises.

in King Henry V. Every motion or puppet-show was accompanied by an interpreter or showman. Thus in the Two Gentlemen of Verona:—

“O excellent motion: O exceeding puppet!

Now will he interpret for her.”

³² The quarto, 1603, reads, “So you must take your husband,” which reading Theobald also proposed; but there seems no reason for departing from the reading of the majority of the old copies. Hamlet puns upon the word mistake; “So you mis-take, or take your husbands amiss for better and worse.” The word was often thus misused for any thing done wrongfully, and even for privy stealing. In one of Bastard's Epigrams, 1598, cited by Steevens:—

“None that seeth her face and making

Will judge her stol'n but by mistaking.”

³³ Midnight weeds. Thus in Macbeth:—

“Root of hemlock, digg'd i' the dark.”

Ham. What! frightened with false fire^a!

Queen. How fares my lord?

Pol. Give o'er the play.

King. Give me some light:—away!

Pol. Lights, lights, lights!

[Exeunt all but HAMLET and HORATIO.

Ham. Why, let the stricken deer go weep³⁴,

The hart ungalled play:

For some must watch, while some must sleep;

Thus runs the world away.—

Would not this, sir, and a forest of feathers (if the rest of my fortunes turn Turk³⁵ with me), with two provincial roses on my rais'd³⁶ shoes, get me a fellowship in a cry³⁷ of players, sir?

Hor. Half a share³⁸.

Ham. A whole one, ay.

For thou dost know, O Damon dear,

^a This speech is omitted in the quartos, except that of 1603.

³⁴ See note on As You Like It, Act ii. Sc. 1, p. 28.

³⁵ To turn Turk was a familiar phrase for any violent change of condition or character.

³⁷ A cry of players. It was usual to call a pack of hounds a cry; from the French meute de chiens: it is here humorously applied to a troop or company of players. It is used again in Coriolanus: Menenius says to the citizens, "You have made good work, you and your cry." In the very curious catalogue of The Companies of Bestys, given in The Booke of St. Albans, many equally singular terms may be found, which seem to have exercised the wit and ingenuity of our ancestors; as a thraue of throschers, a scull or shoal of monks, &c.

³⁸ The players were paid not by salaries, but by shares or portions of the profit, according to merit. See Malone's Account of the Ancient Theatres, passim.

This realm dismantled was
Of Jove himself; and now reigns here
A very, very—peacock³⁹.

Hor. You might have rhymed.

Ham. O good Horatio, I'll take the ghost's word for a thousand pound. Didst perceive?

Hor. Very well, my lord.

Ham. Upon the talk of the poisoning,—

Hor. I did very well note him.

Ham. Ah, ha!—Come, some musick; come, the recorders⁴⁰.—

For if the king like not the comedy,

Why then, belike,—he likes it not, perdy⁴¹.

Come, some musick.

Enter ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

Guil. Good my lord, vouchsafe me a word with you.

Ham. Sir, a whole history.

Guil. The king, sir,—

Ham. Ay, sir, what of him?

Guil. Is, in his retirement, marvellous distemper'd.

³⁹ A very, very—peacock. The old copies read paiock, and paiocke. The peacock was as proverbially used for a proud fool as the lapwing for a silly one. "Pavoneggiare, to court it, to brave it, to peacockise it, to wantonise it, to get up and down fondly, gazing upon himself as a peacocke does."—Florio, Ital. Dict. 1598. Theobald proposed to read paddock; and in the last scene Hamlet bestows this opprobrious name upon the king. Mr. Blakeway has suggested that we might read puttock, which means a base degenerate hawk, a kite; which Shakespeare does indeed contrast with the eagle in Cymbeline, Act i. Sc. 2:—

"I chose an eagle, and did avoid a puttock."

⁴⁰ The recorders. See note on A Midsummer Night's Dream, Act i. Sc. 1. It is difficult to settle exactly the form of this instrument: old writers in general make no distinction between a flute, a pipe, and a recorder; but Hawkins has shown clearly, from a passage in Lord Bacon's Natural History, that the flute and the recorder were distinct instruments.

⁴¹ Perdy is a corruption of the Italian per Dio, or the French par Dieu.

Ham. With drink, sir?

Guil. No, my lord, rather with choler.

Ham. Your wisdom should show itself more richer, to signify this to the doctor; for, for me to put him to his purgation, would, perhaps, plunge him into far more choler.

Guil. Good my lord, put your discourse into some frame, and start not so wildly from my affair.

Ham. I am tame, sir:—pronounce.

Guil. The queen, your mother, in most great affliction of spirit, hath sent me to you.

Ham. You are welcome.

Guil. Nay, good my lord, this courtesy is not of the right breed. If it shall please you to make me a wholesome answer, I will do your mother's commandment: if not, your pardon, and my return shall be the end of my business.

Ham. Sir, I cannot.

Guil. What, my lord?

Ham. Make you a wholesome answer; my wit's diseased: But, sir, such answer as I can make, you shall command; or, rather, as you say, my mother: therefore no more, but to the matter; My mother, you say,—

Ros. Then thus she says: Your behaviour hath struck her into amazement and admiration.

Ham. O wonderful son, that can so astonish a mother!—But is there no sequel at the heels of this mother's admiration? impart^a.

Ros. She desires to speak with you in her closet, ere you go to bed.

Ham. We shall obey, were she ten times our mother. Have you any further trade with us?

Ros. My lord, you once did love me.

Ham. And do still, by these pickers and stealers.

^a This word is wanting in the folio.

Ros. Good my lord, what is your cause of distemper? you do surely⁴² but bar the door upon your own liberty, if you deny your griefs to your friend.

Ham. Sir, I lack advancement.

Ros. How can that be, when you have the voice of the king himself for your succession in Denmark?

Ham. Ay, sir, but While the grass grows,—the proverb is something musty.

Enter the Players, with Recorders.

O! the recorders:—let me see one.—To withdraw with you⁴³.—Why do you go about to recover the wind of me⁴⁴, as if you would drive me into a toil?

Guil. O, my lord, if my duty be too bold, my love is too unmannerly⁴⁵.

Ham. I do not well understand that. Will you play upon this pipe?

Guil. My lord, I cannot.

Ham. I pray you.

Guil. Believe me, I cannot.

⁴² Thus the quarto. The folio has freely, apparently an error for surely of the quartos; omits but, and has of for upon.

⁴⁴ To recover the wind of me. This is a term which has been left unexplained. It is borrowed from hunting, as the context shows; and means, to get the animal pursued to run with the wind, that it may not scent the toil or its pursuers. “Observe how the wind is, that you may set the net so as the hare and wind may come together; if the wind be sideways it may do well enough, but never if it blow over the net into the hare’s face, for he will scent both it and you at a distance.”—Gentleman’s Recreation.

⁴⁵ Hamlet may say with propriety, “I do not well understand that.” Perhaps Guildenstern means, “If my duty to the king makes me too bold, my love to you makes me importunate even to rudeness.”

Ham. I do beseech you.

Guil. I know no touch of it, my lord.

Ham. 'Tis as easy as lying: govern these ventages⁴⁶ with your fingers and thumb, give it breath with your mouth, and it will discourse most eloquent musick. Look you, these are the stops.

Guil. But these cannot I command to any utterance of harmony; I have not the skill.

Ham. Why, look you now, how unworthy a thing you make of me. You would play upon me; you would seem to know my stops; you would pluck out the heart of my mystery; you would sound me from my lowest note to the top of my compass: and there .s much musick, excellent voice, in this little organ; yet cannot you make it speak^a. Why, do you think, I am easier to be played on than a pipe? Call me what instrument you will, though you can fret me, you cannot play upon me.

Enter POLONIUS.

God bless you, sir!

Pol. My lord, the queen would speak with you, and presently.

Ham. Do you see yonder cloud, that's almost in shape of a camel?

Pol. By the mass, and 'tis like a camel, indeed.

Ham. Methinks, it is like a weasel.

Pol. It is back'd like a weasel.

Ham. Or, like a whale?

Pol. Very like a whale.

⁴⁶ The ventages are the holes of the pipe. The stops means the mode of stopping those ventages to produce notes. Malone has made it the "sounds produced." Thus in King Henry V. Prologue:—

"Rumour is a pipe"

And of so easy and so plain a stop."

^a Thus the quarto 1604. The folio omits the word speak.

Ham. Then will I come to my mother by and by —They fool me to the top of my bent⁴⁷.—I will come by and by.

Pol. I will say so.

[Exit POLONIUS.]

Ham. By and by is easily said.—Leave me, friends.

[Exeunt ROS. GUIL. HOR., &c.]

'Tis now the very witching time of night ;
When churchyards yawn, and hell itself breathes out
Contagion to this world : Now could I drink hot blood,

And do such bitter business as the day⁴⁸
Would quake to look on. Soft ! now to my mother,—
O, heart ! lose not thy nature ; let not ever
The soul of Nero enter this firm bosom :
Let me be cruel, not unnatural :
I will speak daggers to her⁴⁹, but use none ;
My tongue and soul in this be hypocrites :
How in my words soever she be shent⁵⁰,
To give them seals never, my soul, consent ! [Exit.

⁴⁷ See note on Act ii. Sc. 2.

⁴⁸ The quartos have:—

“And do such business as the bitter day
Would quake to look on.”

Which is altered in the folio to:—

“And do such bitter business,” &c.

Mr. Dyce thinks we should read:—

“And do such business as the better day
Would quake to look on.”

⁴⁹ “They are pestilent fellows, they speak nothing but bodkins.”
—Return from Parnassus. In the Aulularia of Plautus a phrase not less singular occurs:—

“Me. Quia mitri miseri cerebrum excutiunt, Tua dicta soror: lapides loqueris.” Act ii. Sc. 1.

⁵⁰ To shent is to injure, whether by reproof, blows, or otherwise. Shakespeare generally uses shent for reproof, threatened with angry words. “To give his words seals” is therefore to carry his punishment beyond reproof. The allusion is to the sealing a deed to render it effective. The quarto of 1603:—

“I will speak daggers; those sharp words being spent,
To do her wrong my soul shall ne'er consent.”

SCENE III. A Room in the same.

Enter King, ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN.

King. I like him not ; nor stands it safe with us,
To let his madness range. Therefore, prepare you ;
I your commission will forthwith despatch,
And he to England shall along with you :
The terms of our estate may not endure
Hazard so dangerous, as doth hourly grow
Out of his lunacies.

Guil. We will ourselves provide :
Most holy and religious fear it is,
To keep those many many bodies safe,
That live, and feed, upon your majesty.

Ros. The single and peculiar life is bound,
With all the strength and armour of the mind,
To keep itself from 'noyance ; but much more
That spirit, upon whose weal¹ depend and rest
The lives of many. The cease of majesty
Dies not alone ; but, like a gulf, doth draw
What's near it, with it : it is a massy wheel,
Fix'd on the summit of the highest mount,
To whose huge spokes ten thousand lesser things
Are mortis'd and adjoin'd ; which, when it falls,
Each small annexment, petty consequence,
Attends the boist'rous ruin. Never alone
Did the king sigh, but with a general groan.

King. Arm you, I pray you, to this speedy voyage ;
For we will fetters put upon this fear,
Which now goes too free-footed.

Ros. Guil. We will haste us.

[Exeunt ROSENCRANTZ and GUIL.

¹ The folio reads, " that spirit upon whose spirit depends and rests."

Enter POLONIUS.

Pol. My lord, he's going to his mother's closet.
Behind the arras² I'll convey myself,
To hear the process; I'll warrant, she'll tax him home;
And, as you said, and wisely was it said,
'Tis meet, that some more audience, than a mother,
Since nature makes them partial³, should o'erhear
The speech, of vantage⁴. Fare you well, my liege;
I'll call upon you ere you go to bed,
And tell you what I know.

King.

Thanks, dear my lord.

[Exit POLONIUS.]

O! my offence is rank, it smells to heaven;
It hath the primal eldest curse upon't,
A brother's murder!—Pray can I not,
Though inclination be as sharp as will;
My stronger guilt defeats my strong intent;
And, like a man to double business bound,
I stand in pause where I shall first begin,
And both neglect. What if this cursed hand
Were thicker than itself with brother's blood?
Is there not rain enough in the sweet heavens,
To wash it white as snow? Whereto serves mercy,
But to confront the visage of offence?
And what's in prayer, but this two-fold force,—
To be forestalled, ere we come to fall,
Or pardon'd, being down? Then I'll look up;
My fault is past. But, O, what form of prayer
Can serve my turn? Forgive me my foul murder

² See King Henry IV. Part I. Act ii. Sc. 4.

³ "Matres omnes filiiis

In peccato adjutrices, auxilio in paterna injuria Solent esse."

Ter. Heaut. Act v. Sc. 2.

⁴ Warburton explains of vantage, "by some opportunity of secret observation." I incline to think that, of vantage, in Shakespeare's language, is for advantage, commodi causa.

That cannot be ; since I am still possess'd
 Of those effects for which I did the murder,
 My crown, mine own ambition, and my queen.
 May one be pardon'd, and retain th'offence ?
 In the corrupted currents of this world,
 Offence's gilded hand may shove by justice ;
 And oft 'tis seen, the wicked prize⁵ itself
 Buys out the law : But 'tis not so above :
 There is no shuffling, there the action lies
 In his true nature : and we ourselves compell'd,
 Even to the teeth and forehead of our faults,
 To give in evidence. What then ? what rests ?
 Try what repentance can : What can it not ?
 Yet what can it, when one can not repent ?
 O wretched state ! O bosom, black as death !
 O limed⁶ soul ; that struggling to be free,
 Art more engag'd ! Help, angels, make assay !
 Bow, stubborn knees ! and, heart, with strings of steel,
 Be soft as sinews of the new-born babe ;
 All may be well ! [Retires and kneels.

Enter HAMLET.

Ham. Now might I do it, pat, now he is praying ;
 And now I'll do't ; and so he goes to heaven :
 And so am I reveng'd ? That would be scann'd⁷ :
 A villain kills my father ; and, for that,
 I, his sole son, do this same villain send
 To heaven.
 Why, this is hire and salary⁸, not revenge.
 He took my father grossly full of bread ;
 With all his crimes broad blown, as flush^a as May ;

⁵ Mr. Collier's folio suggests purse, instead of prize.

⁶ i. e. caught as with birdlime.

⁷ That would be scann'd, i. e. that requires consideration, or ought to be estimated.

⁸ The quarto reads, base and silly.

^a The folio has "as fresh as May." "Behold this was the

And, how his audit stands, who knows, save heaven ?
 But, in our circumstance and course of thought,
 'Tis heavy with him : And am I then reveng'd,
 To take him in the purging of his soul,
 When he is fit and season'd for his passage ?
 No.

Up, sword ; and know thou a more horrid hent⁹ :
 When he is drunk, asleep, or in his rage ;
 Or in the incestuous pleasure of his bed ;
 At gaming, swearing ; or about some act
 That has no relish of salvation in't :
 Then trip him, that his heels may kick at heaven :
 And that his soul may be as damn'd, and black,
 As hell, whereto it goes¹⁰. My mother stays :
 This physick but prolongs thy sickly days. [Exit.

The King rises and advances.

King. My words fly up, my thoughts remain below :
 Words, without thoughts, never to heaven go¹¹.
 [Exit.

iniquity of thy sister Sodom ; pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness was in her and her daughters."—Ezekiel xvi. 49

⁹ Shakespeare has used the verb to hent, to take, to lay hold on, elsewhere ; but the word is here used as a substantive, for hold or opportunity.

¹⁰ Johnson has justly exclaimed against the horrible nature of this desperate revenge ; but the quotations of the commentators from other plays cotemporary with and succeeding this, show that it could not have been so horrifying to the ears of our ancestors. In times of less civilisation, revenge was held almost a sacred duty ; and the purpose of the appearance of the ghost in this play is chiefly to excite Hamlet to it. Yet perhaps there is nothing more in it than another constitutional stratagem of Hamlet to find an excuse to himself for deferring action.

¹¹ The first quarto reads :—

“ No king on earth is safe, if God's his foe.”

SCENE IV. Another Room in the same.Enter Queen and POLONIUS.

Pol. He will come straight. Look, you lay home to him :

Tell him, his pranks have been too broad to bear with ;
And that your grace hath screen'd and stood between Much heat and him. I'll sconce me even here¹.

'Pray you, be round with him.

Ham. [Within.] Mother, mother, mother.

Queen. I'll warrant you ;

Fear me not :—withdraw, I hear him coming.

[POLONIUS hides himself]

Enter HAMLET.

Ham. Now, mother ; what's the matter ?

Queen. Hamlet, thou hast thy father much offended.

Ham. Mother, you have my father much offended.

Queen. Come, come, you answer with an idle tongue.

Ham. Go, go, you question with a wicked² tongue.

Queen. Why, how now, Hamlet ?

Ham. What's the matter now ?

Queen. Have you forgot me ?

Ham. No, by the rood, not so .

¹ All the old copies read, "I'll silence me," except the quarto 1603, which has, "I'll shrowd myself behind the arras." There can be no doubt that we should read, as Mr. Hunter suggests, "I'll sconce, or ensconce me even here." In the Merry Wives of Windsor, Act iii. Sc. 3, we have, "I'll ensconce me behind the arras." The circumstance of Polonius hiding himself behind the arras and the manner of his death are found in the old black letter prose Hystory of Hamblett.

² So the quartos. The folio has idle, probably caught by the compositor from the preceding line.

You are the queen, your husband's brother's wife ;
 And,—'would it were not so !—you are my mother Queen. Nay, then I'll set those to you that can speak.

Ham. Come, come, and sit you down ; you shall not budge ;

You go not, till I set you up a glass
 Where you may see the inmost part of you.

Queen. What wilt thou do ? thou wilt not murder me ?

Help, help, ho !

Pol. [Behind.] What, ho ! help ! help ! help !

Ham. How now ! a rat ? [Draws.] Dead, for a ducat, dead.

[HAMLET makes a pass through the Arras.

Pol. [Behind.] O ! I am slain. [Falls, and dies.

Queen. O me ! what hast thou done ?

Ham. Nay, I know not :—Is't the king ?

[Lifts up the Arras, and draws forth POLONIUS.

Queen. O, what a rash and bloody deed is this !

Ham. A bloody deed ; almost as bad, good mother,
 As kill a king, and marry with his brother⁴.

Queen. As kill a king !

⁴ There is an idle and verbose controversy between Steevens and Malone, whether the poet meant to represent the Queen as guilty or innocent of being accessory to the murder of her husband. Surely there can be no doubt upon the matter. The Queen shows no emotion at the mock play when it is said—

“ In second husband let me be accurst,

None wed the second but who-kill'd the first ”— and now manifests the surprise of conscious innocence upon the subject. It should also be observed that Hamlet never directly accuses her of any guilty participation in that crime. I am happy to find my opinion, so expressed in December, 1823, confirmed by the newly discovered quarto copy of 1603 ; in which the Queen in a future speech is made to say :—

“ But, as I have a soul, I swear by heaven,
 I never knew of this most horrid murder.”

Ham. Ay, lady, 'twas my word.—
Thou wretched, rash, intruding fool, farewell!

[To POLONIUS.

I took thee for thy betters; take thy fortune:
Thou find'st to be too busy is some danger.—
Leave wringing of your hands: Peace; sit you down,
And let me wring your heart: for so I shall,
If it be made of penetrable stuff:
If damned custom have not braz'd it so,
That it is proof and bulwark against sense.

Queen. What have I done, that thou dar'st wag thy tongue
In noise so rude against me?

Ham. Such an act,
That blurs the grace and blush of modesty;
Calls virtue, hypocrite; takes off the rose
From the fair forehead of an innocent love,
And sets a blister there^a; makes marriage vows
As false as dicers' oaths: O! such a deed
As from the body of contraction plucks
The very soul; and sweet religion makes
A rhapsody of words. Heaven's face doth glow;
Yea, this solidity and compound mass,
With tristful visage, as against the doom,
Is thought-sick at the act⁵.

^a Takes off the rose

*From the fair forehead of an innocent love,
And sets a blister there.*

The folio has makes instead of sets. In Hamlet's preceding speech the quarto has better instead of betters, but the latter is Shakespeare's idiom, for we have it again in As You Like It. One would think by the ludicrous gravity with which Steevens and Malone take this figurative language in a literal sense, that they were unused to the adventurous metaphors of Shakespeare. Mr. Boswell's note is short and to the purpose. "Rose is put generally for the ornament, the grace of an innocent love." Ophelia describes Hamlet as—

"The expectancy and rose of the fair state."

⁵ The quarto of 1604 gives this passage thus:—

Queen. Ah me! what act,
That roars so loud, and thunders in the index⁶?

Ham. Look here upon this picture, and on this
The counterfeit presentment of two brothers.
See, what a grace was seated on this brow:
Hyperion's curls; the front of Jove himself;
An eye like Mars, to threaten and command;
A station⁷, like the herald Mercury
New-lighted on a heaven-kissing hill;
A combination, and a form, indeed,
Where every god did seem to set his seal,
To give the world assurance of a man:
This was your husband.—Look you now, what follows:
Here is your husband; like a mildew'd ear,
Blasting his wholesome brother⁸. Have you eyes?
Could you on this fair mountain leave to feed,
And batten⁹ on this moor? Ha! have you eyes?
You cannot call it, love: for, at your age,
The hey-day in the blood is tame, it's humble,

“Heaven's face does glow
O'er this solidity and compound mass
With heated visage, as against the doom,
Is thought-sick at the act.”

⁶ The index, or table of contents, was formerly placed at the beginning of books. In Othello, Act ii. Sc. 7, we have—“An index and obscure prologue to the history of foul and lustful thoughts.”

⁷ It is evident from this passage that whole length pictures of the two kings were formerly introduced. Station does not mean the spot where any one is placed, but the act of standing, the attitude. So in Antony and Cleopatra, Act iii. Sc. 3:—

“Her motion and her station are as one.”

Without this explanation it might be conceived that the compliment designed for the attitude of the King was bestowed on the place where Mercury is represented as standing.

⁸ The folio misprints breath for brother. Here the allusion is to Pharaoh's dream. Genesis, xli.

⁹ i. e. to feed rankly or grossly: it is usually applied to the fattening of animals. Marlowe has it for “to grow fat.” Bat is the old word for increase; whence we have battle, batten, batful.

And waits upon the judgement ; And what judgement
ment

Would step from this to this? [Sense¹⁰, sure you have,
Else could you not have motion : But, sure, that sense
Is apoplex'd : for madness would not err ;
Nor sense to ecstasy was ne'er so thrall'd,
But it reserv'd some quantity of choice,
To serve in such a difference.] What devil was't
That thus hath cozen'd you at hoodman-blind¹¹ ?
[Eyes without feeling, feeling without sight,
Ears without hands or eyes, smelling sans all,
Or but a sickly part of one true sense
Could not so mope¹².]

O shame ! where is thy blush ? Rebellious hell,
If thou canst mutine¹³ in a matron's bones,
To flaming youth let virtue be as wax,
And melt in her own fire¹⁴ : proclaim no shame,
When the compulsive ardour gives the charge ;
Since frost itself as actively doth burn,
And reason panders will.

*How shall having a visit in her bed
if her eyes are shut*

Queen. O Hamlet, speak no more :
Thou turn'st mine eyes into my very soul ;

¹⁰ Sense here is not used for reason ; but for sensation, feeling or perception : as before in this scene :—

“ That it be proof and bulwark against sense.”

Warburton, misunderstanding the passage, proposed to read notion instead of motion. The whole passage in brackets is omitted in the folio.

¹¹ “ The hoodwinke play, or hoodman blind, in some place, called blindmanbuf.”—Baret. It appears also to have been called blind
hob. It is hob-man blind in the quarto of 1603.

¹² i. e. could not be so dull and stupid.

¹³ Mutine for mutiny. This is the old form of the verb. Shakespeare calls mutineers mutines in a subsequent scene ; but this is,
I believe, peculiar to him : they were called mutiners anciently.

¹⁴ Thus in the quarto of 1603 :—

“ Why appetite with you is in the wane,
Your blood runs backward now from whence it came :
Who'll chide hot blood within a virgin's heart
When lust shall dwell within a matron's breast.”

And there I see such black and grained¹⁵ spots
As will not leave their tinct.

Ham. Nay, but to live
In the rank sweat of an enseamed¹⁶ bed ;
Stew'd in corruption ; honeying, and making love
Over the nasty sty ;—

Queen. O, speak to me no more ;
These words, like daggers, enter in mine ears :
No more, sweet Hamlet.

Ham. A murderer, and a villain ;
A slave, that is not twentieth part the tithe
Of your precedent lord :—a vice¹⁷ of kings :
A cutpurse of the empire and the rule ;
That from a shelf the precious diadem stole,
And put it in his pocket !

Queen. No more.

Ham. A king of shreds and patches :—

*Enter Ghost*¹⁸.

Save me, and hover o'er me with your wings,
You heavenly guards !—What would your gracious figure ?

Queen. Alas, he's mad.

Ham. Do you not come your tardy son to chide,

¹⁵ Grained spots ; that is, dyled in grain, deeply imbued.

¹⁶ Enseamed, i. e. rank, gross. It is a term borrowed from falconry. It is well known that the seam of any animal was the fat or tallow ; and a hawk was said to be enseamed when she was too fat or gross for flight. By some confusion of terms, however, to enream a hawk was used for to purge her of glut and grease ; by analogy it should have been unseam. Beaumont and Fletcher, in The False One, use inseamed in the same manner :—

“ His lechery inseamed upon him.

It should be remarked, that the quarto of 1603 reads incestuous ; as does that of 1611.

¹⁷ i. e. “ The low mimic, the counterfeit, a dizard, or common vice and jester, counterfeiting the gestures of any man.”—Fleming. Shakespeare afterwards, calls him a king of shreds and patches, alluding to the party-coloured habit of the vice or fool in a play.

¹⁸ The first quarto adds, in his night-gown.

That, laps'd in time and passion¹⁹, lets go by
 The important acting of your dread command?
 O, say!

Ghost. Do not forget: This visitation
 Is but to whet thy almost blunted purpose.
 But, look! amazement on thy mother sits:
 O, step between her and her fighting soul;
 Conceit²⁰ in weakest bodies strongest works;
 Speak to her, Hamlet.

Ham. How is it with you, lady?

Queen. Alas, how is't with you?
 That you do bend your eye on vacancy,
 And with the incorporal air do hold discourse?
 Forth at your eyes your spirits wildly peep;
 And, as the sleeping soldiers in th'alarm,
 Your bedded hair, like life in excrements²¹,
 Starts up, and stands on end. O gentle son,
 Upon the heat and flame of thy distemper
 Sprinkle cool patience. Whereon do you look?

Ham. On him! on him!—Look you, how pale he glares!

¹⁹ Laps'd in time and passion. Johnson explains this:—"That having suffered time to slip and passion to cool, let's go by," &c. This explanation is confirmed by the quarto of 1603:—

"Do you not come your tardy son to chide,
 That I thus long have let revenge slip by."

²⁰ Conceit for conception, imagination. This was the force of the word among our ancestors. Thus in The Rape of Lucrece:—

"And the conceited painter was so nice."

²¹ Thus in The Comedy of Errors, "Why is time such a niggard of hair, being as it is so plentiful an excrement?"

Not only the hair of animals having neither life nor sensation was called an excrement, but the feathers of birds had the same appellation. Thus in Walton's Complete Angler, ch. i. p. 9, ed. 1766, "the several kinds of fowl . . . with their very excrements, afford him a soft lodging at night."

So in Macbeth:—

"My fell of hair
 Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir
 As life were in't."

His form and cause conjoin'd, preaching to stones,
 Would make them capable²².—Do not look upon me;
 Lest, with this piteous action, you convert
 My stern affects²³: then what I have to do
 Will want true colour; tears, perchance, for blood.

Queen. To whom do you speak this?

Ham. Do you see nothing there?

Queen. Nothing at all; yet all that is, I see.

Ham. Nor did you nothing hear?

Queen. No, nothing, but ourselves.

Ham. Why, look you there! look, how it steals away!

My father, in his habit as he liv'd!

Look, where he goes, even now, out at the portal!

[Exit Ghost.]

Queen. This is the very coinage of your brain:
 This bodiless creation ecstasy²⁴

²² Capable for susceptible, intelligent, i. e. would excite in them capacity to understand. Thus in King Richard III.—

“O ’tis a parlous boy,

Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable.”

²³ My stern affects. All former editions read, “My stern effects.” “Effects, for actions, deeds, effected,” says Malone! We should certainly read affects, i. e. dispositions, affections of the mind: as in that disputed passage of Othello:—

“The young affects in me defunct.”

It is remarkable that we have the same error in Measure for Measure, Act iii. Sc. 1:—

“Thou art not certain,

For thy complexion shifts to strange effects

After the moon.”

Dr. Johnson saw the error in that play, and proposed to read affects. But the present passage has escaped observation. The “piteous action” of the ghost could not alter things already effected, but might move Hamlet to a less stern mood of mind.

²⁴ Ecstasy, i. e. any temporary alienation of mind. See p. 212 ante, note 31, and The Tempest, note 14, end of Act iii. This speech of the queen has the following remarkable variation in the quarto of 1603:—

“Alas, it is the weakness of thy brain

Which makes thy tongue to blazon thy heart’s grief:

But as I have a soul, I swear to heaven,

Is very cunning in.

Ham. Ecstasy!

My pulse, as yours, doth temperately keep time,
 And makes as healthful musick. It is not madness
 That I have utter'd : bring me to the test,
 And I the matter will re-word ; which madness
 Would gambol from. Mother, for love of grace,
 Lay not that flattering unction to your soul,
 That not your trespass, but my madness speaks :
 It will but skin and film the ulcerous place ;
 Whiles rank corruption, mining all within,
 Infects unseen. Confess yourself to heaven ;
 Repent what's past ; avoid what is to come ;
 And do not spread the compost on the weeds,
 To make them ranker. Forgive me this my virtue :
 For in the fatness of these pursy times,
 Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg ;
 Yea, curb²⁵ and woo, for leave to do him good.

Queen. O, Hamlet ! thou hast cleft my heart in twain.

Ham. O, throw away the worser part of it,
 And live the purer with the other half.
 Good night : but go not to mine uncle's bed
 Assume a virtue, if you have it not.
 [That monster, custom, who all sense doth eat
 Of habit's evil, is angel yet in this²⁶ ;
 That to the use of actions fair and good
 He likewise gives a frock, or livery,

I never knew of this most horrid murder :

But, Hamlet, this is only fantasy,

And for my love forget these idle fits."

²⁵ i. e. bow. "Courber, Fr. to bow, crook, or curb." Thus in Pierce Plowman :—

"Then I courbid on my knees."

²⁶ This passage is not in the folio. The old copies have, "Of habit's devill." I adopt Dr. Thirlby's emendation, for what sense can be made of habit's devil? The old copy indicates clearly the misprint, for the word is here devill, while just below and elsewhere it is uniformly divell when the evil spirit is meant.

That aptly is put on :] Refrain to-night²⁷ ;
 And that shall lend a kind of easiness
 To the next abstinence : [²⁸the next more easy :
 For use almost can change the stamp of nature,
 And either curb²⁹ the devil or throw him out
 With wondrous potency.] Once more, good night !
 And when you are desirous to be bless'd,
 I'll blessing beg of you.—For this same lord,

[Pointing to POLONIUS

I do repent : But heaven hath pleas'd it so,
 To punish me with this, and this with me,
 That I must be their scourge and minister.
 I will bestow him, and will answer well
 The death I gave him. So, again, good night !—
 I must be cruel, only to be kind :
 Thus bad begins, and worse remains behind.—
 One word more, good lady³⁰.

Queen.

What shall I do ?

* Ham. Not this, by no means, that I bid you do :
 Let the bloat king tempt you again to bed ;
 Pinch wanton on your cheek ; call you, his mouse ;
 And let him, for a pair of reechy³¹ kisses,

²⁷ Here the quarto of 1603 has two remarkable lines:—

“ And, mother, but assist me in revenge,
 And in his death your infamy shall die.”

²⁸ The next more easy, &c. This passage, as far as potency, is also omitted in the folio.

²⁹ This passage is only found in the quartos. In that of 1604 this line stands:—

“ And either the devil, or throw him out.”

The undated quarto, and those of 1611 and 1637, have:—

“ And maister the devil,”

which destroys the rhythm. Some word appears to have been omitted after either, and Malone substituted curb, which occurs in a similar passage in the Merchant of Venice.

³⁰ One word more, good lady. These words are from the quartos.

³¹ i. e. reeky or fumant ; reekant, as Florio calls it. The king has been already called the bloat king, which hints at his intemperance. In Coriolanus we have the reechy neck of a kitchen wench. Reeky and reechy are the same word, and always applied to any vaporous exhalation, even to the fumes of a dunghill.

Or paddling in your neck with his damn'd fingers,
 Make you to ravel all this matter out,
 That I essentially am not in madness,
 But mad in craft³². 'Twere good, you let him know ;
 For who, that's but a queen, fair, sober, wise,
 Would from a paddock, from a bat, a gib³³,
 Such dear concernings hide ? who would do so ?
 No, in despite of sense, and secrecy,
 Unpeg the basket on the house's top,
 Let the birds fly ; and, like the famous ape,
 To try conclusions³⁴, in the basket creep,
 And break your own neck down.

Queen. Be thou assur'd, if words be made of breath,
 And breath of life, I have no life to breathe
 What thou hast said to me³⁵.

Ham. I must to England³⁶ ; you know that ?

Queen. Alack,

I had forgot ; 'tis so concluded on.

Ham. [There's letters seal'd : and my two school-fellows³⁷,—

Whom I will trust, as I will adders fang'd,—

³² The hint for Hamlet's feigned madness is taken from the old Historie of Hamblett already mentioned.

³³ For paddock, a toad, see Macbeth, Act i. Sc. 1 : and for gib, a cat, see King Henry IV. Part i. Act i. Sc. 2.

³⁴ To try conclusions is to put to proof, or try experiments. See Merchant of Venice, Act ii. Sc. 2. Sir John Suckling possibly alludes to the same story in one of his letters :—" It is the story after all of the jackanapes and the partridges ; thou starest after a beauty till it be lost to thee, and then let'st out another, and starest after that till it is gone too."

³⁵ The quarto of 1603 has here another remarkable variation :—

" Hamlet, I vow by that Majesty
 That knows our thoughts and looks into our hearts,
 I will conceal, consent, and do my best,
 What stratagem soe'er thou shalt devise."

³⁶ The manner in which Hamlet came to know that he was to be sent to England is not developed. He expresses surprise when the king mentions it in a future scene ; but his design of passing for a madman may account for this.

³⁷ This and the eight following verses are omitted in the folio.

They bear the mandate ; they must sweep my way,
 And marshal me to knavery : Let it work ;
 For 'tis the sport, to have the engineer
 Hoist with his own petar³⁸ : and't shall go hard,
 But I will delve one yard below their mines,
 And blow them at the moon : O, 'tis most sweet,
 When in one line two crafts directly meet.—
] This man shall set me packing.
 I'll lug the guts into the neighbour room :
 Mother, good night.—Indeed, this counsellor
 Is now most still, most secret, and most grave,
 Who was in life a foolish prating knave.
 Come, sir, to draw toward an end with you :—
 Good night, mother.

[Exeunt severally ; HAMLET dragging in POLONIUS.

ACT IV.

SCENE I. The same.

Enter King, Queen, ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN.

King.

 HERE'S matter in these sighs, these profound heaves :
 You must translate ; 'tis fit we understand them :

Where is your son ?

Queen. Bestow this place on us a little while¹.—

[To ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN, who go out.

³⁸ Hoist with his own petar. Hoist for hoisted. To hoise was the old verb. A petar was a kind of mortar used to blow up gates.

¹ This line does not appear in the folio, in which Guildenstern and Rosencrantz are not brought on the stage here at all.

Ah², my good lord, what have I seen to-night!

King. What, Gertrude? How does Hamlet?

Queen. Mad as the sea, and wind, when both contend³

Which is the mightier: In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras hearing something stir,
Whips out his rapier, cries A rat! a rat!
And, in this brainish apprehension, kills
The unseen good old man.

King. O heavy deed!

It had been so with us, had we been there:

His liberty is full of threats to all;

To you yourself, to us, to every one.

Alas! how shall this bloody deed be answer'd?

It will be laid to us, whose providence

Should have kept short, restrain'd, and out of haunt⁴,

This mad young man: but so much was our love,

We would not understand what was most fit;

But, like the owner of a foul disease,

To keep it from divulging, let it feed

Even on the pith of life. Where is he gone?

Queen. To draw apart the body he hath kill'd:

O'er whom his very madness, like some ore,

Among a mineral⁵ of metals base,

² The quarto reads, "Ah, mine own lord."

³ Thus in Lear:—"He was met e'en now
As mad as the vex'd sea."

⁴ Out of haunt means out of company. "Frequentia, a great haunt or company of folk." Thus in Antony and Cleopatra:—

"Dido and her Sichæus shall want troops,
And all the haunt be ours."

And in Romeo and Juliet:—

"We talk here in the public haunt of men."

⁵ Shakespeare, with a license not unusual among his cotemporaries, uses ore for gold, and mineral for mine. Bullokar and Blount both define "or or ore, gold; of a golden colour." And the Cambridge Dictionary, 1594, under the Latin word mineralia, will show how the English mineral came to be used for a mine. Thus also in The Golden Remaines of Hales of Eton, 1693:—"Controversies of the times, like spirits in the minerals, with all their labour nothing is done."

Shows itself pure ; he weeps for what is done.

King. O, Gertrude, come away !

The sun no sooner shall the mountains touch,
But we will ship him hence : and this vile deed
We must, with all our majesty and skill,
Both countenance and excuse.—Ho ! Guildenstern !

Enter ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

Friends both, go join you with some further aid :
Hamlet in madness hath Polonius slain,
And from his mother's closet hath he dragg'd him
Go, seek him out ; speak fair, and bring the body
Into the chapel. I pray you, haste in this.

[Exeunt ROS. and GUIL.

Come, Gertrude, we'll call up our wisest friends ;
And let them know, both what we mean to do,
And what's untimely done : [so, haply, slander,—
Whose whisper o'er the world's diameter,
As level as the cannon to his blank⁶,
Transports his poison'd shot,—may miss our name,
And hit the woundless air⁷.]—O, come away !
My soul is full of discord and dismay. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. Another Room in the same.

Enter HAMLET.

Ham. ——— Safely stowed, —[Ros. &c. within.

⁶ The blank was the mark at which shots or arrows were directed. Thus in The Winter's Tale, Act ii. Sc. 3 :—

“ Out of the blank and level of my aim.”

⁷ The passage in brackets is not in the folio. The words “ So, haply, slander ” are also omitted in the quartos ; they were supplied by Theobald. The addition is supported by a passage in Cymbeline :—

“ No, 'tis slander,

Whose edge is sharper than the sword, whose tongue
Out-venoms all the worms of Nile, whose breath
Rides on the posting winds, and doth bely
All corners of the world.”

Hamlet! Lord Hamlet!] But soft¹!—what noise? who calls on Hamlet? O, here they come.

Enter ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

Ros. What have you done, my lord, with the dead body?

Ham. Compounded it with dust, whereto 'tis kin.

Ros. Tell us where 'tis; that we may take it thence,
And bear it to the chapel.

Ham. Do not believe it.

Ros. Believe what?

Ham. That I can keep your counsel, and not mine own. Besides, to be demanded of a sponge!—what replication should be made by the son of a king?

Ros. Take you me for a sponge, my lord?

Ham. Ay, sir; that soaks up the king's countenance, his rewards, his authorities². But such officers do the king best service in the end: He keeps them, like an ape doth nuts³, in the corner of his jaw; first mouthed to be last swallowed: When he needs what you have gleaned, it is but squeezing you, and, sponge, you shall be dry again⁴.

Ros. I understand you not, my lord.

Ham. I am glad of it: A knavish speech sleeps in a foolish ear.

Ros. My lord, you must tell us where the body is,
and go with us to the king.

¹ But soft! these two words are not in the folio.

² Here the quarto 1603 inserts, "that makes his liberality your storehouse, but," &c.

³ The omission of the words "doth nuts," in the old copies, had obscured this passage. Dr. Farmer proposed to read "like an ape an apple." The words are now supplied from the newly discovered quarto of 1603.

⁴ "He's but a sponge, and shortly needs must leese,
His wrong got juice, when greatness' fist shall squeeze
His liquor out." Murston, Sat. vii.

Ham. The body is with the king, but the king is not with the body⁵. The king is a thing——

Guil. A thing, my lord?

Ham. Of nothing: bring me to him. Hide fox, and all after⁶. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. Another Room in the same.

Enter King, attended.

King. I have sent to seek him, and to find the body. How dangerous is it, that this man goes loose! Yet must not we put the strong law on him: He's lov'd of the distracted multitude, Who like not in their judgement, but their eyes; And, where 'tis so, th'offender's scourge is weigh'd, But never the offence. To bear all smooth and even, This sudden sending him away must seem Deliberate pause: Diseases, desperate grown, By desperate appliance are relieved, Or not at all.—

Enter ROSENCRANTZ.

How now? what hath befall'n?

Ros. Where the dead body is bestow'd, my lord, We cannot get from him.

King. But where is he?

Ros. Without, my lord; guarded, to know your pleasure.

King. Bring him before us.

Ros. Ho, Guildenstern! bring in my lord.

⁵ Hamlet affects obscurity. His meaning may be, "The king is a body without a kingly soul, a thing—of nothing."

⁶ Hide fox, and all after. This was a juvenile sport, most probably what is now called hoop, or hide and seek; in which one child hides himself, and the rest run all after, seeking him. The words are not in the quarto.

Enter HAMLET and GUILDENSTERN.

King. Now, Hamlet, where's Polonius?

Ham. At supper.

King. At supper? Where?

Ham. Not where he eats, but where he is eaten: a certain convocation of politick worms are e'en at him. Your worm is your only emperor for diet^a: we fat all creatures else, to fat us; and we fat ourselves for maggots; Your fat king, and your lean beggar, is but variable service; two dishes, but to one table; that's the end.

[King. Alas, alas!

Ham. A man may fish with the worm that hath eat of a king; and eat of the fish that hath fed of that worm¹.]

King. What dost thou mean by this?

Ham. Nothing, but to show you how a king may go a progress through the guts of a beggar.

King. Where is Polonius?

Ham. In heaven; send thither to see: if your messenger find him not there, seek him i'the other place yourself. But, indeed, if you find him not within this month, you shall nose him as you go up the stairs into the lobby.

King. Go seek him there. [To some Attendants.

Ham. He will stay till ye come.

[Exeunt Attendants.

King. Hamlet, this deed, for thine especial safety,—
Which we do tender, as we dearly grieve
For that which thou hast done,—must send thee hence
With fiery quickness: Therefore prepare thyself;

^a The reader will not fail to see the allusion here to the Diets of the Empire convoked at Worms; an event so notorious from its connection with the progress of the Reformation. The word politick is not in the folio.

The bark is ready, and the wind at help²,
The associates tend, and every thing is bent
For England.

Ham. For England?

King. Ay, Hamlet.

Ham. Good.

King. So is it, if thou knew'st our purposes.

Ham. I see a cherub, that sees them.—But, come ;
for England !—Farewell, dear mother.

King. Thy loving father, Hamlet.

Ham. My mother : Father and mother is man and wife ; man and wife is one flesh ; and so, my mother.
Come, for England. [Exit.

King. Follow him at foot ; tempt him with speed aboard ;

Delay it not, I'll have him hence to-night ;
Away ; for every thing is seal'd and done
That else leans on the affair : 'Pray you, make haste.

[Exeunt Ros. and GUIL.

And, England, if my love thou hold'st at aught,
(As my great power thereof may give thee sense ;
Since yet thy cicatrice looks raw and red
After the Danish sword, and thy free awe
Pays homage to us,) thou may'st not coldly set³
Our sovereign process ; which imports at full,
By letters conjuring to that effect,
The present death of Hamlet. Do it, England ;
For like the hectick in my blood he rages⁴,
And thou must cure me : Till I know 'tis done,
How'er my haps, my joys were ne'er begun. [Exit.

² i. e. in modern phrase, "the wind serves," or is right to aid or help you on your way.

³ To set formerly meant to estimate. There is no ellipsis, as Malone supposed. "To sette, or tell the pryce ; æstimare." To set much or little by a thing, is to estimate it much or little.

⁴ "I would forget her, but a fever she Reigns in my blood." Love's Labour's Lost.

SCENE IV. A Plain in Denmark.

Enter FORTINBRAS, and Forces, marching.

For. Go, captain, from me greet the Danish king ;
Tell him, that, by his licence, Fortinbras
Claims¹ the conveyance of a promis'd march
Over his kingdom. You know the rendezvous.
If that his majesty would aught with us,
We shall express our duty in his eye²,
And let him know so.

Cap. I will do't, my lord.

For. Go softly on^a.

[Exeunt FORTINBRAS and Forces.

Enter HAMLET, ROSENCRANTZ, GUILDEN-STERN, &c.

[³ Ham. Good sir, whose powers are these ?

Cap. They are of Norway, sir.

Ham. How purpos'd, sir

I pray you ?

Cap. Against some part of Poland.

Ham. Who

Commands them, sir ?

Cap. The nephew to old Norway, Fortinbras.

Ham. Goes it against the main of Poland, sir,
Or for some frontier ?

Cap. Truly to speak, and with no addition,
We go to gain a little patch of ground,
That hath in it no profit but the name.

² Eye for presence. In the Regulations for the establishment of the Queen's Household, 1627 :—“ All such as doe service in the queen's eye.” And in The Establishment of Prince Henry's Household, 1610 :—“ All such as doe service in the prince's eye.” It was the formulary for the royal presence.

^a The folio misprints safely for softly.

³ The remainder of this scene is omitted in the folio.

To pay five ducats, five, I would not farm it ;
 Nor will it yield to Norway, or the Pole,
 A ranker rate, should it be sold in fee.

Ham. Why, then the Polack never will defend it.

Cap. Yes, 'tis already garrison'd.

Ham. Two thousand souls, and twenty thousand ducats,

Will not debate the question of this straw :
 This is the imposthume of much wealth and peace ;
 That inward breaks, and shows no cause without
 Why the man dies.—I humbly thank you, sir.

Cap. God be wi' you, sir. [Exit Captain.

Ros. Will't please you go, my lord ?

Ham. I'll be with you straight. Go a little before.

[Exit Ros. and GUIL.

How all occasions do inform against me,
 And spur my dull revenge ! What is a man,
 If his chief good, and market of his time,
 Be but to sleep, and feed ? a beast, no more.
 Sure, he, that made us with such large discourse⁴,
 Looking before and after, gave us not
 That capability and godlike reason
 To fust in us unus'd. Now, whether it be Bestial oblivion, or some craven⁵ scruple

⁴ See note 23 on Act i. Sc. 2, p. 143. It is evident that discursive powers of mind are meant ; or, as Johnson explains it, " such latitude of comprehension, such power of reviewing the past, and anticipating the future." Since I wrote the former note, I find that Bishop Wilkins makes rationation and discourse convertible terms.

⁵ Craven is recreant, cowardly. It may be satisfactorily traced from crant, creant, the old French word for an act of submission. It is so written in the old metrical romance of Ywaine and Gawaine (Ritson, vol. i. p. 133):—

" Or yelde the til us als creant."

And in Richard Cœur de Lion (Weber, vol. ii. p. 208):—

" On knees he fel down, and cryde, 'Créaunt.'"

It then became cravant, cravent, and at length craven. It is superfluous to add that recreant is from the same source.

Of thinking too precisely on the event,—
 A thought, which, quarter'd, hath but one part wisdom,
 And, ever, three parts coward,—I do not know
 Why yet I live to say, This thing's to do :
 Sith I have cause, and will, and strength, and means,
 To do't. Examples, gross as earth, exhort me :
 Witness, this army of such mass, and charge,
 Led by a delicate and tender prince ;
 Whose spirit, with divine ambition puff'd,
 Makes mouths at the invisible event ;
 Exposing what is mortal, and unsure,
 To all that fortune, death, and danger dare,
 Even for an egg-shell. Rightly to be great,
 Is, not to stir without great argument ;
 But greatly to find quarrel in a straw,
 When honour's at the stake. How stand I then,
 That have a father kill'd, a mother stain'd,
 Excitements of my reason, and my blood⁶,
 And let all sleep? while, to my shame, I see
 The imminent death of twenty thousand men,
 That, for a fantasy, and trick of fame,
 Go to their graves like beds : fight for a plot⁷
 Whereon the numbers cannot try the cause,
 Which is not tomb enough, and continent⁸,
 To hide the slain?—O, from this time forth,
 My thoughts be bloody, or be nothing worth ! [Exit.

⁶ Excitements of my reason and my blood.

i. e. "Provocations which excite both my reason and my passions to vengeance."

⁷ A plot of ground. Thus in The Mirror for Magistrates :—

"Of ground to win a plot, a while to dwell,
 We venture lives, and send our souls to hell."

⁸ Continent means that which comprehends or encloses. Thus in Lear :—

"Rive your concealing continents."
 And in Chapman's version of the third Iliad :—

"Did take

Thy fair form for a continent of parts as fair."

"If there be no fulnesse, then is the continent greater than the content."—Bacon's Advancement of Learning, 1633, p. 7.

SCENE V. Elsinore. A Room in the Castle.Enter Queen and HORATIO.Queen. —I will not speak with her.Hor. She is importunate ; indeed, distract ;
Her mood will needs be pitied.Queen. What would she have ?Hor. She speaks much of her father ; says, she hears,
'There's tricks i' the world ; and hems, and beats her heart ;Spurns enviously¹ at straws ; speaks things in doubt
That carry but half sense : her speech is nothing,
Yet the unshaped use of it doth move
The hearers to collection² ; they aim³ at it,
And botch the words up fit to their own thoughts ;
Which, as her winks and nods, and gestures yield them.
Indeed would make one think, there might⁴ be thought,Though nothing sure, yet much unhappily⁵.Queen. 'Twere good, she were spoken with ; for she may strew
Dangerous conjectures in ill-breeding minds :¹ Envy is often used by Shakespeare and his cotemporaries for malice, spite, or hatred :—“ You turn the good we offer into envy.”*King Henry VIII.*See Merchant of Venice, Act iv. Sc. 1. Indeed “ enviously, and spitefully,” are treated as synonymous by our old writers.² To collection, i. e. to gather or deduce consequences from such premises. Thus in Cymbeline, Act v. Sc. 5 :—

“ Whose containing

Is so from sense to hardness, that I can Make no collection of it.”

See note on that passage.

³ The quartos read, yawn. To aim is to guess.⁴ The folio reads, would.⁵ Unhappily, that is, mischievously.

Let her come in⁶.

[Exit HORATIO.

To my sick soul, as sin's true nature is,
Each toy seems prologue to some great amiss⁷ :
So full of artless jealousy is guilt,
It spills itself in fearing to be spilt.

Re-enter HORATIO, with OPHELIA⁸.

Oph. Where is the beautiful majesty of Denmark ?

Queen. How now, Ophelia ?

Oph. How should I your true love know,
From another one ?

By his cockle hat and staff,

And his sandal shoon⁹. [Singing.

Queen. Alas, sweet lady, what imports this song ?

Oph. Say you ? nay ; 'pray you, mark.

He is dead and gone, lady, [Sings.

He is dead and gone ;

At his head a grass-green turf,

At his heels a stone.

O, ho !

Queen. Nay, but Ophelia,——

Oph. 'Pray you, mark.

White his shroud as the mountain snow. [Sings.

⁶ The three first lines of this speech are given to Horatio in the quarto.

⁷ Shakespeare is not singular in his use of amiss as a substantive. Several instances are adduced by Steevens, and more by Mr. Nares in his Glossary. Each toy is, each trifle.

⁹ These were the badges of pilgrims. The cockle shell was an emblem of their intention to go beyond sea. The habit being held sacred, was often assumed as a disguise in love adventures. In The Old Wive's Tale, by Peele, 1595 :—"I will give thee a palmer's staff of ivory, and a scallop shell of beaten gold."

Enter King.

Queen. Alas, look here, my lord.

Oph. *Larded all with sweet flowers ;
Which bewept to the grave¹⁰ did go,
With true-love showers.*

King. How do you, pretty lady ?

Oph. Well, God'ield¹¹ you ! They say, the owl was a baker's daughter¹². Lord ! we know what we are, but know not what we may be. God be at your table !

King. Conceit upon her father.

Oph. 'Pray, let us have no words of this ; but when they ask you what it means, say you this :

Good morrow, 'tis Saint Valentine's day¹³,

¹⁰ The quarto reads ground. All the copies have, "did not go."

¹¹ See Macbeth, Act i. Sc. vi.

¹² "This," says Mr. Douce, "is a common tradition in Gloucestershire, and is thus related :—'Our Saviour went into a baker's shop where they were baking, and asked for some bread to eat. The mistress of the shop immediately put a piece of dough in the oven to bake for him ; but was reprimanded by her daughter, who insisting that the piece of dough was too large, reduced it to a very small size. The dough, however, immediately began to swell, and presently became of a most enormous size. Whereupon the baker's daughter cried out Heugh, heugh, heugh, which owl-like noise probably induced our Saviour to transform her into that bird for her wickedness.' The story is related to deter children from illiberal behaviour to the poor."

¹³ The old copies read :—

"To-morrow 'tis Saint Valentine's day."

The emendation was made by Dr. Farmer. The origin of the choosing of Valentines has not been clearly developed. Mr. Douce traces it to a Pagan custom of the same kind during the Lupercalia feasts in honour of Pan and Juno, celebrated in the month of February by the Romans. The anniversary of the good bishop, or Saint Valentine, happening in this month, the pious early promoters of Christianity placed this popular custom under the patronage of the saint, in order to eradicate the notion of its pagan origin. In France the Valantin was a moveable feast, celebrated on the first Sunday in Lent, which was called the jour des brandons, because the boys carried about lighted torches on

*All in the morning betime,
And I a maid at your window,
To be your Valentine :*

*Then up he rose, and don'd his clothes,
And dupp'd¹⁴ the chamber door ;
Let in the maid, that out a maid ·
Never departed more.*

King. Pretty Ophelia !

Oph. Indeed, without an oath, I'll make an end on't :

*By Gis, and by Saint Charity¹⁵,
Alack, and fye for shame !
Young men will do't, if they come to't ;
By cock, they are to blame.*

*Quoth she, before you tumbled me,
You promised me to wed :*

[He answers.]

*So would I ha' done, by yonder sun,
An thou hadst not come to my bed.*

King. How long hath she been thus ?

Oph. I hope, all will be well. We must be patient :
but I cannot choose but weep, to think, they should lay him i' the cold ground : My brother shall know of that day. It is very probable that the saint has nothing to do with the custom, his legend gives no clue to any such supposition. The popular notion that the birds choose their mates about this period has its rise in the poetical world of fiction.

¹⁴ To dup is to do up, as to don is to do on, to doff to do off, &c. Thus in Damon and Pythias, 1582 :—“ The porters are drunk, will they not dup the gate to-day ? ” The phrase probably had its origin from doing up or lifting the latch. In the old cant language to dup the gyger was to open the door. See Harman's Caveat for Cursetors, 1575.

¹⁵ Saint Charity is found in the Martyrology on the first of August. “ Romæ passio sanctarum virginum Fidei, Spei, et Charitatis, quæ sub Hadriano principe martyriæ coronam adeptæ sunt. ” Spenser mentions her in Eclog. v. 225. By gis and by cock are only corruptions, or rather substitutions, for different forms of imprecation by the sacred name.

it, and so I thank you for your good counsel. Come, my coach! Good night, ladies; good night, sweet ladies: good night, good night. [Exit.]

King. Follow her close! give her good watch, I pray you. [Exit HORATIO.]

O! this is the poison of deep grief; it springs
All from her father's death: And now behold,
O Gertrude, Gertrude¹⁶,
When sorrows come, they come not single spies,
But in battalions! First, her father slain;
Next, your son gone; and he most violent author
Of his own just remove: The people muddied,
Thick and unwholesome in their thoughts and whispers,
For good Polonius' death; and we have done but greenly¹⁷,
In hugger-mugger¹⁸ t'inter him: Poor Ophelia
Divided from herself, and her fair judgement;
Without the which we are pictures, or mere beasts.
Last, and as much containing as all these,
Her brother is in secret come from France:
Feeds on his wonder¹⁹, keeps himself in clouds,

¹⁶ In the quarto 1603 the King says:—

“ Ah pretty wretch! this is a change indeed:
O time, how swiftly runs our joys away?
Content on earth was never certain bred,
To-day we laugh and live, to-morrow dead.”

¹⁷ Greenly is unskilfully, with inexperience.

¹⁸ i. e. secretly. “Clandestinare, to hide or conceal by stealth, or in hugger mugger.”—Florio. Thus in North's translation of Plutarch:—“Antonius, thinking that his body should be honourably buried, and not in hugger mugger.” Pope, offended at this strange phrase, changed it to private, and was followed by others. Upon which Johnson remarks:—“If phraseology is to be changed as words grow uncouth by disuse, or gross by vulgarity, the history of every language will be lost: we shall no longer have the words of any author: and, as these alterations will be often unskilfully made, we shall in time have very little of his meaning.”

¹⁹ So the quartos. The folio reads, “Keeps on his wonder.”

And wants not buzzers to infect his ear
 With pestilent speeches of his father's death ;
 Wherein necessity, of matter beggar'd,
 Will nothing stick our person to arraign
 In ear and ear. O my dear Gertrude ! this,
 Like to a murdering piece²⁰, in many places
 Gives me superfluous death ! [A noise within.
Queen. Alack ! what noise is this²¹ ?

Enter a Gentleman.

King. Attend !

Where are my Switzers²² ? Let them guard the door :
 What is the matter ?

Gent. Save yourself, my lord ;
 The ocean, overpeering of his list,
 Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste,
 Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
 O'erbears your officers ! The rabble call him lord ;
 And, as the world were now but to begin,
 Antiquity forgot, custom not known,
 The ratifiers and props of every word,
 They cry, *Choose we ; Laertes shall be king*²³ !

²⁰ A murdering-piece, or murderer, was a small piece of artillery ; in French meurtrière. It took its name from the loop-holes and embrasures in towers and fortifications, which were so called. The portholes in the fore-castle of a ship were also thus denominated. "Meurtrière, c'est un petit canonnière, comme celles des tours et murailles, ainsi appelé, parceque tirant par icelle a desceu, ceux ausquels on tire sont facilement meurtri."—Nicot. "Visiere meurtrière, a port-hole for a murdering-piece in the fore-castle of a ship."—Cotgrave. Case shot, filled with small bullets, nails, old iron, &c. was often used in these murderers. This accounts for the raking fire attributed to them in the text, and in Beaumont and Fletcher's Double Marriage :—

" Like a murdering-piece, aims not at me,
 But all that stand within the dangerous level."

²¹ The speech of the queen is omitted in the quartos.

²² Switzers, for royal guards. The Swiss were then, as since, mercenary soldiers of any nation that could afford to pay them.

²³ The meaning of this contested passage appears to me this :

Caps, hands, and tongues, applaud it to the clouds,
Laertes shall be king, Laertes king!

Queen. How cheerfully on the false trail they cry!
 O, this is counter²⁴, you false Danish dogs.

King. The doors are broke. [Noise within.]

Enter LAERTES, armed; Danes following.

Laer. Where is this king? — Sirs, stand you all without.

Dan. No, let's come in.

Laer. I pray you, give me leave.

Dan. We will, we will.

[They retire without the door.]

Laer. I thank you:—keep the door.—O thou vile
 king,

Give me my father.

Queen. Calmly, good Laertes.

Laer. That drop of blood that's calm^a, proclaims me bastard;

Cries cuckold to my father; brands the harlot
 Even here, between the chaste unsmirched²⁵ brow
 Of my true mother.

King. What is the cause, Laertes,
 That thy rebellion looks so giant-like?—
 Let him go, Gertrude; do not fear our person;

The rabble call him lord; and (as if the world were now but to begin, as if antiquity were forgot, and custom unknown, which are the ratifiers and props of every word,) cry, Choose we, &c. Mr. Tyrwhitt would read work instead of word. The reader may compare the speech of Ulysses on tradition in Troilus and Cressida.

²⁴ Hounds are said to run counter when they are upon a false scent, or hunt it by the heel, running backward and mistaking the course of the game. See Comedy of Errors, Act iv. Sc. 2.

^a Thus the quartos, 1604, &c. The folio has—

“That drop of blood, that calmes.”

²⁵ Unsmirched is unsullied, spotless. See Act i. Sc. 3, p. 150, note 4.

There's such divinity doth hedge²⁶ a king,
That treason can but peep to what it would,
Acts little of his will.—Tell me, Laertes,
Why thou art thus incens'd ;—Let him go, Gertrude ;—

Speak, man.

Laer. Where is my father ?

King. Dead.

Queen. But not by him.

King. Let him demand his fill.

Laer. How came he dead ? I'll not be juggled with :
To hell, allegiance ! vows, to the blackest devil !
Conscience, and grace, to the profoundest pit !
I dare damnation. To this point I stand,—
That both the worlds I give to negligence²⁷,
Let come what comes ; only I'll be reveng'd
Most thoroughly for my father.

King. Who shall stay you ?

Laer. My will, not all the world's :
And, for my means, I'll husband them so well,
They shall go far with little.

King. Good Laertes,
If you desire to know the certainty
Of your dear father's death, is't writ in your revenge,

²⁶ The quarto, 1603, reads wall. Mr. Boswell has adduced the following anecdote of Queen Elizabeth as an apposite illustration of this passage :—“ While her Majesty was on the Thames, near Greenwich, a shot was fired by accident, which struck the royal barge, and hurt a waterman near her. The French ambassador being amazed, and all crying Treason, Treason ! yet she, with an undaunted spirit, came to the open place of the barge, and bade them never fear, for if the shot were made at her, they durst not shoot again : such majesty had her presence, and such boldness her heart, that she despised fear, and was, as all princes are, or should be, so full of divine fullness, that guiltie mortality durst not behold her but with dazzled eyes.”—Henry Chettle's England's Mourning Garment.

²⁷ “ But let the frame of things disjoint, both the worlds suffer.”
Macbeth.

That, sweep-stake, you will draw both friend and foe,
Winner and loser?

Laer. None but his enemies.

King. Will you know them then?

Laer. To his good friends thus wide I'll ope my arms;

And like the kind life-rendering pelican,
Repast them with my blood²⁸.

King. Why, now you speak
Like a good child, and a true gentleman.
That I am guiltless of your father's death,
And am most sensibly²⁹ in grief for it,
It shall as level to your judgement pierce³⁰
As day does to your eye.

Danes. [Within.] Let her come in.

Laer. How now! what noise is that?

Re-enter OPHELIA, fantastically dressed with Straws and Flowers.

O heat, dry up my brains! tears seven times salt,
Burn out the sense and virtue of mine eye!—
By heaven, thy madness shall be paid with weight,
Till our scale turn the beam. O rose of May!

²⁸ The folio reads politician instead of pelican, and has other misprints in this scene. This fabulous bird is not unfrequently made use of for purposes of poetical illustration by our elder poets: Shakespeare has again referred to it in King Richard II. and in King Lear:—

“’Twas this flesh begot these pelican daughters.”

In the old play of King Leir, 1605, it is also used, but in a different sense:—

“I am as kind as is the pelican,

That kills itself to save her young ones' lives.”

²⁹ The folio reads, sensible.

³⁰ Peirce is the reading of the folio. The quarto has 'pear, an awkward contraction of appear. I do not see why appear is more intelligible. Indeed as level is here used for direct, Shakespeare's usual meaning of the word, the reading of the quarto, preferred by Johnson, Steevens, and Mr. Collier, is less proper.

Dear maid, kind sister, sweet Ophelia !
 O heavens ! is't possible, a young maid's wits
 Should be as mortal as an old man's life ?
 Nature is fine³¹ in love ; and, where 'tis fine,
 It sends some precious instance of itself
 After the thing it loves.

Oph. They bore him barefac'd on the bier ;
 Hey non nonny, nonny hey nonny :
 And on his grave rains^a many a tear ;—

Fare you well, my dove !

Laer. Hadst thou thy wits, and didst persuade revenge,

It could not move thus.

Oph. You must sing, Down-a-down, an you call him a-down-a. O, how the wheel³² becomes it ! it is the false steward, that stole his master's daughter.

³¹ Nature is fine in love. The three concluding lines of this speech are not in the quarto. The meaning appears to be, Nature is refined or subtilised by love, the senses are rendered more ethereal, and being thus refined, some precious portions of the mental energies fly off, or are sent after the beloved object ; when bereft of that object they are lost to us, and we are left in a state of mental privation :—

“ Even so by love the young and tender wit
 Is turned to folly.”

“ Love is a smoke, rais'd with the fume of sighs ;
 Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers' eyes ;
 Being vex'd, a sea nourish'd with lovers' tears :
 What is it else ?—a madness,” &c.

^a The quarto has “ in his grave rains.” The folio prints the next line in italics as part of the song.

³² The wheel is the burthen of a ballad, from the Latin rota, a round, which is usually accompanied with a burthen frequently repeated. Thus also in old French, roterie signified such a round or catch, and rotuenge, or rotruhenge, the burthen or refrain as it is now called. Our old English term refrette, “ the foote of the dittie, a verse often interlaced, or the burden of a song,” was probably from refrain ; or from refresteler, to pipe over again. It is used by Chaucer in The Testament of Love. This term was not obsolete in Cotgrave's time, though it would now be as difficult to adduce an instance of its use as of the wheel, at the same time the quotation will show that the down of a ballad was another

Laer. This nothing's more than matter.

Oph. There's rosemary, that's for remembrance ;

for thoughts³³.

term for the burthen. "Refrain, the refret, burthen, or downe of a ballad." Steevens unfortunately forgot to note from whence he made the following extract, though he knew it was from the preface to some black letter collection of songs or sonnets :—"The song was accounted a good one, though it was not moche graced with the wheele, which in no wise accorded with the subject matter thereof." Thus also Nicholas Breton, in his Toyes for Idle Head, 1577 :—

" That I may sing full merrily
Not heigh ho wele, but care away."

It should be remembered that the old musical instrument called a rote, from its wheel, was also termed vielle, quasi wheel.

³³ Our ancestors gave to almost every flower and plant its emblematic meaning, and like the ladies of the east, made them almost as expressive as written language, in their hieroglyphical sense. Perdita, in The Winter's Tale, distributes her flowers in the same manner as Ophelia, and some of them with the same meaning. In The Handfull of Pleasant Delites, 1584, we have a ballad called "A Nosegaie alwaies sweet for Lovers to send for Tokens," where we find :—

" Rosemarie is for remembrance
Betweene us day and night ;
Wishing that I might alwaies have
You present in my sight."

Rosemary had this attribute because it was said to strengthen the memory, and was therefore used as a token of remembrance and affection between lovers, and was distributed as an emblem both at weddings and funerals. Why pansies, which the folio misprints paconcies, (pensées), are emblems of thoughts is obvious. Fennel was emblematic of fluttery, and "Dare finocchio, to give fennel," was in other words "to flatter, to dissemble," according to Florio. Thus in the ballad above cited :—

" Fennel is for flatterers,
An evil thing 'tis sure."

Browne, in his Britannia's Pastorals, says :—

" The columbine, in tawny often taken,
Is then ascribed to such as are forsaken."

Rue was for ruth or repentance. It was also commonly called herbgrace, probably from being accounted "a present remedy against all poison, and a potent auxiliary in exorcisms, all evil things fleeing from it." By wearing it with a difference (an heraldic term for a mark of distinction) may be meant that the

There's fennel for you, and columbines :—there's rue for you ; and here's some for me :—we may call it, herb of grace o'Sundays :—O ! you must wear your rue with a difference.—There's a daisy :—I would give you some violets ; but they wither'd all, when my father died :—They say, he made a good end,——

For bonny sweet Robin is all my joy,— [Sings.

Laer. Thought³⁴ and affliction, passion, hell itself, She turns to favour, and to prettiness.

Oph. And will he not come again ? [Sings.

And will he not come again ?

No, no, he is dead,

Go to thy death-bed,

He never will come again.

And we cast away moan ;

queen should wear it as a mark of repentance ; Ophelia as a token of grief. The daisy was emblematic of a dissembler :—“Next them grew the dissembling daisy, to warne such light of love wenches not to trust every fair promise that such amorous batchelors make.”—Greene's Quip for an Upstart Courtier. The violet is for faithfulness, and is thus characterised in The Lover's Nosegaie. In Bion's beautiful elegy on the death of Adonis, Mr. Todd has pointed out :—

“ πάντα σὺν αὐτῷ

Ὡς τήνος τέθνακε, καὶ ἄνδρα πάντ' ἐμαράνθη.”

³⁴ Thought, among our ancestors, was used for grief, care, pensiveness. “Curarum volvere in pectore. He will die for sorrow and thought.”—Baret. Thus in Antony and Cleopatra :—Act iii. Sc. 2 :—

“Cleo. What shall we do, Enobarbus ?

“Eno.

Think and die.”

See note on that passage.

³⁵ Poor Ophelia in her madness remembers the ends of many

And of all christian souls ! I pray God. God be wi' you ! [Exit OPHELIA.

Laer. Do you see this, O God ^a?

King. Laertes, I must commune³⁶ with your grief,
Or you deny me right. Go but apart,
Make choice of whom your wisest friends you will,
And they shall hear and judge 'twixt you and me :
If by direct or by collateral hand
They find us touch'd, we will our kingdom give,
Our crown, our life, and all that we call ours,
To you in satisfaction ; but, if not,
Be you content to lend your patience to us,
And we shall jointly labour with your soul
To give it due content³⁷.

Laer. Let this be so ;

old popular ballads. "Bonny Robin" appears to have been a favourite, for there were many others written to that tune. The editors have not traced the present one. It is introduced in Eastward Hoe, written by Jonson, Chapman, and Marston, where some parts of this play are apparently burlesqued. Hamlet is the name given to a foolish footman in the same scene. I know not why it should be considered an attack on Shakespeare ; it was the usual license of comedy to sport with every thing serious and even sacred. Hamlet Travestie may as well be called an invidious attack on Shakespeare.

^a The folio has—

"Do you see this, you gods?"

The quarto omits see, and I pray God in Ophelia's speech.

³⁶ The folio reads common, which is only a varied orthography of the same word. "We will devise and common of these matters."—Baret.

³⁷ Thus in the quarto 1603 :—

"King. Content you, good Laertes, for a time,
Although I know your grief is as a flood,
Brim full of sorrow, but forbear a while,
And think already the revenge is done
On him that makes you such a hapless son.

"Laer. You have prevail'd, my lord, a while I'll strive,
To bury grief within a tomb of wrath,
Which once unheard, then the world shall hear
Laertes had a father he held dear.

"King. No more of that, ere many days be done
You shall hear that you do not dream upon."

His means of death, his obscure burial³⁸,
 No trophy, sword, nor hatchment, o'er his bones,
 No noble rite, nor formal ostentation³⁹,—
 Cry to be heard, as 'twere from heaven to earth,
 That I must call't in question.

King. So you shall ;
 And where th' offence is, let the great axe fall.
 I pray you, go with me. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI. Another Room in the same.

Enter HORATIO and a Servant.

Hor. What are they that would speak with me ?

Serv. Sailors¹, sir ; they say, they have letters for you.

Hor. Let them come in.— [Exit Servant.

I do not know from what part of the world
 I should be greeted, if not from Lord Hamlet.

Enter Sailors.

1 Sail. God bless you, sir.

Hor. Let him bless thee too.

1 Sail. He shall, sir, an't please him. There's a letter for you, sir : it comes² from the ambassador that was bound for England ; if your name be Horatio, as I am let to know it is.

Hor. [Reads.] “ Horatio, when thou shalt have overlook'd this, give these fellows some means to the king ; they have letters for him. Ere we were two days old at sea, a pirate of very warlike appointment

³⁸ The quarto, 1604, has funeral.

³⁹ The funerals of knights and persons of rank were made with great ceremony and ostentation formerly. Sir John Hawkins (himself of the order) observes that “ the sword, the helmet, the gauntlet, spurs, and tabard are still hung over the grave of every knight.”

² The folio reads, it came.

gave us chase: Finding ourselves too slow of sail, we put on a compelled valour; and in the grapple I boarded them: on the instant, they got clear of our ship; so I alone became their prisoner. They have dealt with me like thieves of mercy; but they knew what they did; I am to do a good turn for them. Let the king have the letters I have sent; and repair thou to me with as much haste as thou would'st fly death. I have words to speak in thine³ ear, will make thee dumb; yet are they much too light for the bore⁴ of the matter. These good fellows will bring thee where I am. Rosencrantz and Guildenstern hold their course for England: of them I have much to tell thee. Farewell.

He that thou knowest thine, HAMLET."

Come, I will give you way for these your letters;
And do't the speedier, that you may direct me
To him from whom you brought them. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. Another Room in the same.

Enter KING and LAERTES.

King. Now must your conscience my acquittance seal,

And you must put me in your heart for friend;
Sith you have heard, and with a knowing ear,
That he, which hath your noble father slain,
Pursu'd my life.

Laer. It well appears:—But tell me,
Why you proceeded not against these feats,
So crimeful¹ and so capital in nature,
As by your safety, greatness, wisdom, all things else,
You mainly were stirr'd up.

³ The folio reads, your.

⁴ The bore is the caliber of a gun. The matter (says Hamlet) would carry heavier words.

King. O, for two special reasons ;
 Which may to you, perhaps, seem much unsinew'd,
 But yet to me they are strong. The queen, his mother,
 Lives almost by his looks ; and for myself,
 (My virtue, or my plague, be it either-which),
 She's so conjunctive to my life and soul,
 That, as the star moves not but in his sphere,
 I could not but by her. The other motive,
 Why to a publick count I might not go,
 Is, the great love the general gender² bear him :
 Who, dipping all his faults in their affection,
 Would, like the spring that turneth wood to stone,
 Convert his gyves to graces³ ; so that my arrows,
 Too slightly timber'd for so loud a wind⁴,
 Would have reverted to my bow again,
 And not where I had aim'd them.

Laer. And so have I a noble father lost ;
 A sister driven into desperate terms ;
 Whose worth, if praises may go back again⁵,
 Stood challenger on mount of all the age
 For her perfections :—But my revenge will come.

King. Break not your sleeps for that : you must not think,
 That we are made of stuff so flat and dull,
 That we can let our beard be shook with danger⁶,
 And think it pastime. You shortly shall hear more :

² i. e. the common race of the people. We have the general and the million in other places in the same sense.

³ “Would, like the spring which turneth wood to stone, convert his fetters into graces:” punishment would only give him more grace in their opinion. The quarto reads work for would.

⁴ My arrows

Too slightly timber'd for so loud a wind.

“Lighte shaftes cannot stand in a rough wind.”—Ascham's Toxophilus, 1589, p. 57.

⁵ If praises may go back again, i. e. if I may praise what has been, but is now to be found no more.

⁶ “Idcirco stolidam præbet tibi vellere barbam Jupiter?” Persius, Sat. ii.

I lov'd your father, and we love ourself;
And that, I hope, will teach you to imagine,—

Enter a Messenger.

How now⁷? what news?

Mess. Letters, my lord, from Hamlet:
This to your majesty; this to the queen.

King. From Hamlet! who brought them?

Mess. Sailors, my lord, they say: I saw them not;
They were given me by Claudio, he received them
Of him that brought them⁸.

King. Laertes, you shall hear them:—
Leave us. [Exit Messenger.]

[Reads.] “High and mighty, you shall know, I am set naked on your kingdom. To-morrow shall I beg leave to see your kingly eyes: when I shall, first asking your pardon thereunto, recount the occasion of my sudden and more strange return. HAMLET.”

What should this mean! Are all the rest come back?
Or is it some abuse, and no such thing?

Laer. Know you the hand?

King. 'Tis Hamlet's character. Naked,—
And, in a postscript here, he says, alone:
Can you advise me?

Laer. I am lost in it, my lord. But let him come;
It warms the very sickness in my heart,
'That I shall live and tell him to his teeth,
Thus diddest thou.

King. If it be so, Laertes,
As how should it be so? how otherwise?—
Will you be rul'd by me?

⁷ How now is omitted in the quarto: as is letters in the next speech.

⁸ This hemistich is not in the folio, in which also the words “and more strange” in the letter are omitted.

Laer.

Ay, my lord ;

So you will not o'errule me to a peace⁹.

King. To thine own peace. If he be now return'd,—
As checking¹⁰ at his voyage, and that he means
No more to undertake it,—I will work him
To an exploit, now ripe in my device,
Under the which he shall not choose but fall :
And for his death no wind of blame shall breathe ;
But even his mother shall uncharge the practice,
And call it, accident.

Laer.

[My lord, I will be rul'd ;

The rather, if you could devise it so,

That I might be the organ.

King.

It falls right.

You have been talk'd of since your travel much,
And that in Hamlet's hearing, for a quality
Wherein, they say, you shine : your sum of parts
Did not together pluck such envy from him,
As did that one ; and that, in my regard,
Of the unworthiest siege¹¹.

Laer.

What part is that, my lord ?

King. A very riband in the cap of youth,

Yet needful too ; for youth no less becomes

The light and careless livery that it wears,

Than settled age his sables and his weeds,

Importing health and graveness¹².] Two months since,

⁹ First folio, omitting Ay, my lord, reads, If so, you'll not o'er-rule me to a peace.

¹⁰ Thus the folio. Two of the quartos read, "As liking not his voyage." To check, to hold off, or fly from, as in fear. It is a phrase taken from falconry :—"For who knows not, quoth she, that this hawk, which comes now so fair to the fist, may tomorrow check at the lure."—Hinde's Eliosto Libidinoso, 1606.

¹¹ Of the unworthiest siege, i. e. of the lowest rank : siege for seat or place :—

"I fetch my birth

From men of royal siege."Othello.

¹² i. e. implying or denoting gravity and attention to health. If we

Here was a gentleman of Normandy,—
 I have seen myself, and serv'd against the French,
 And they can well on horseback : but this gallant
 Had witchcraft in't ; he grew unto his seat ;
 And to such wondrous doing brought his horse,
 As he had been incorp's'd and demi-natur'd
 With the brave beast : so far he topp'd my thought,
 That I, in forgery of shapes and tricks¹³,
 Come short of what he did.

Laer. A Norman was't ?

King. A Norman.

Laer. Upon my life, Lamord.

King. The very same.

Laer. I know him well : he is the brooch, indeed,
 And gem of all the nation.

King. He made confession of you ;
 And gave you such a masterly report,
 For art and exercise in your defence¹⁴,
 And for your rapier most especially,
 That he cried out, 'twould be a sight indeed,
 If one could match you : [the scrimers¹⁵ of their nation,
 He swore, had neither motion, guard, nor eye,
 If you oppos'd them :] Sir, this report of his
 Did Hamlet so envenom with his envy,
 That he could nothing do, but wish and beg
 Your sudden coming o'er, to play with you.
 Now, out of this,——

Laer. What out of this, my lord ?

King. Laertes, was your father dear to you ?

should not rather read wealth for health. The passages in brackets are not in the folio.

¹³ That I, in forgery of shapes and tricks, i. e. that I, in imagining and describing his feats, &c. The folio has pass'd instead of topp'd in the preceding line.

¹⁴ Science of defence, i. e. fencing.

¹⁵ Scrimers, i. e. fencers, from escrimeur, Fr. This unfavourable description of French swordsmen is not in the folio.

Or are you like the painting of a sorrow,
A face without a heart?

Laer.

Why ask you this?

King. Not that I think, you did not love your father;

But that I know, love is begun by time¹⁶;

And that I see, in passages of proof,
Time qualifies the spark and fire of it.

[There lives within the very flame of love

A kind of wick, or snuff, that will abate it:

And nothing is at a like goodness still;

For goodness, growing to a plurisy¹⁷,

Dies in his own too-much: That we would do,

We should do when we would; for this would changes,

And hath abatements and delays as many,

As there are tongues, are hands, are accidents;

And then this should is like a spendthrift's sigh¹⁸,

That hurts by easing. But, to the quick o' the ulcer:]

Hamlet comes back; What would you undertake,

¹⁶ But that I know love is begun by time, &c. "As love is begun by time, and has its gradual increase, so time qualifies and abates it." Passages of proof are transactions of daily experience. The next ten lines are not in the folio.

¹⁷ Plurisy is superabundance; our ancestors used the word in this sense, as if it came from plus, pluris, and not from πλεῦρα. The disease was formerly thought to proceed from too much blood flowing to the part affected:—

"In a word,

Thy plurisy of goodness is thy ill."

Massinger's Unnatural Combat.

¹⁸ Johnson says it is a prevalent notion "that sighs impair the strength, and wear out the animal powers." Shakespeare in King Henry VI. has "blood-consuming sighs." And in Fenton's Tragic Discourses:—"Your scorching sighs that have already drained your body of his wholesome humours." Mr. Blakeway justly observes, that "Sorrow for neglected opportunities and time abused seems most aptly compared to the sigh of a spendthrift—good resolutions not carried into effect are deeply injurious to the moral character. Like sighs, they hurt by easing, they unburden the mind and satisfy the conscience, without producing any effect upon the conduct."

To show yourself in deed your father's son
More than in words?

Laer. To cut his throat i' the church.

King. No place, indeed, should murder sanctuarize;
Revenge should have no bounds. But, good Laertes,
Will you do this, keep close within your chamber:
Hamlet, return'd, shall know you are come home:
We'll put on those shall praise your excellence,
And set a double varnish on the fame
The Frenchman gave you; bring you, in fine, together,
And wager o'er your heads: he, being remiss,
Most generous and free from all contriving,
Will not peruse the foils; so that, with ease,
Or with a little shuffling, you may choose
A sword unbated¹⁹, and, in a pass of practice²⁰,
Requite him for your father.

Laer. I will do't:
And, for the purpose, I'll anoint my sword.
I bought an unction of a mountebank,
So mortal, that but dip^a a knife in it,
Where it draws blood no cataplasm so rare,
Collected from all simples that have virtue
Under the moon, can save the thing from death,
That is but scratch'd withal: I'll touch my point
With this contagion; that, if I gall him slightly,
It may be death²¹.

¹⁹ i. e. unblunted, to bate, or rather "to rebate, was to make dull.
Acium ferre hebetare." Thus in Love's Labour's Lost, we have:—

"That honour which shall bate his scythe's keen edge."
And in Measure for Measure:—

"Rebate and blunt his natural edge."

²⁰ Pass of practice is a pass of skill, one in which the fencer was well practised.

^a The folio misprints "I but dipt a knife in it."

²¹ Ritson has exclaimed with just indignation and abhorrence against the villainous assassinlike treachery of Laertes in this horrid plot: he observes, "There is more occasion that he should be pointed out for an object of abhorrence, as he is a character we

King. Let's further think of this ;
 Weigh, what convenience, both of time and means,
 May fit us to our shape : If this should fail,
 And that our drift look through our bad performance,
 'Twere better not assay'd : therefore this project
 Should have a back, or second, that might hold,
 If this should blast in proof²². Soft ;—let me see :—
 We'll make a solemn wager on your cunnings²³,
 I hav't :

When in your motion you are hot and dry,
 (As make your bouts more violent to that end,)
 And that he calls for drink, I'll have prepar'd²⁴ him
 A chalice for the nonce ; whereon but sipping,
 If he by chance escape your venom'd stuck²⁵,
 Our purpose may hold there. But stay, what noise²⁶ ?

Enter Queen.

How now, sweet queen ?

Queen. One woe doth tread upon another's heel,
 So fast they follow :—Your sister's drown'd, Laertes.

Laer. Drown'd ! O, where ?

Queen. There is a willow grows aslant²⁷ the brook, are led to respect and admire in some preceding scenes." In the old quarto of 1603 this contrivance originates with the king :—

" When you are hot, in midst of all your play,
 Among the foils shall a keen rapier lie,
 Steeped in a mixture of deadly poison,
 That if it draws but the least dram of blood
 In any part of him he cannot live."

²² If this should blast in proof, as fire-arms sometimes burst in proving their strength.

²³ Cunning is skill. The folio has commings.

²⁴ The quartos read prefer'd ; the folio prepar'd. The modern editors read preferr'd, but I think without good reason.

²⁵ A stuck is a thrust. Stoccata, Ital. Sometimes called a stoccado in English.

²⁶ But stay, what noise ? These words are not in the folio, which substitutes " How, sweet queen."

²⁷ The quartos have ascaunt ; and two lines lower,
 " Therewith fantastick garlands did she make."

That shows his hoar leaves in the glassy stream :
 There with fantastick garlands did she come
 Of crow-flowers, nettles, daisies, and long purples²⁸,
 That liberal²⁹ shepherds give a grosser name,
 But our cold maids do dead men's fingers call them :
 There on the pendent boughs her coronet weeds
 Clambering to hang, an envious sliver broke ;
 When down her weedy trophies, and herself,
 Fell in the weeping brook. Her clothes spread wide ;
 And, mermaid-like, awhile they bore her up :
 Which time, she chanted snatches of old tunes³⁰ ;
 As one incapable³¹ of her own distress,
 Or like a creature native and indu'd³²
 Unto that element : but long it could not be,
 Till that her garments, heavy with their drink,
 Pull'd the poor wretch from her melodious lay
 To muddy death.

Laer. Alas ! then, is she drown'd ?

Queen. Drown'd, drown'd.

Laer. Too much of water hast thou, poor Ophelia,
 And therefore I forbid my tears : But yet³³

²⁸ The ancient botanical name of the long purples was testiculis morionis, or orchis priapiscus. The grosser name to which the queen alludes is sufficiently known in many parts of England. It had kindred appellations in other languages. In Sussex it is said to be called dead men's hands. Its various names may be seen in Lyte's Herbal, 1578, or in Cotgrave's Dictionary.

²⁹ i. e. licentious. See Much Ado about Nothing, Act iv. Sc. 1, and Othello, Act ii. Sc. 1.

³⁰ The quarto reads "snatches of old lauds," i. e. hymns. Hymns of praise were so called from the psalm Laudate Dominum.

³¹ i. e. unsusceptible of it. See note 22, p. 244.

³² Indu'd was anciently used in the sense of endowed with qualities of any kind, as in the phrase "a child indued with the grace and dexteritie that his father had." Shakespeare may, however, have used it for habited, accustomed.

³³ Thus the quarto 1603:—

"Therefore I will not drown thee in my tears,
 Revenge it is must yield this heart relief,
 For woe begets woe, and grief hangs on grief."

It is our trick ; nature her custom holds,
 Let shame say what it will : when these are gone,
 The woman will be out³⁴.—Adieu, my lord !
 I have a speech of fire, that fain would blaze,
 But that this folly drowns³⁵ it. [Exit.

King. Let's follow, Gertrude :
 How much I had to do to calm his rage !
 Now fear I, this will give it start again ;
 Therefore, let's follow. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I. A Church Yard.

Enter Two Clowns, with Spades, &c.

1 Clown.

IS she to be buried in christian burial, that wilfully seeks her own salvation ?

2 Clo. I tell thee, she is ; and therefore make her grave straight¹ : the crowner hath sate on her, and finds it christian burial.

1 Clo. How can that be, unless she drowned herself in her own defence ?

³⁴ Thus in King Henry V. Act iv. Sc. 6 :—

“ But all my mother came into my eyes,
 And gave me up to tears.”

³⁵ The folio reads, doubts it, i. e. does it out.

¹ How Johnson could think that any particular mode of making Ophelia's grave was meant I cannot imagine. Nothing is so common as this mode of expression : straight is merely a contraction of straightway, immediately. Numerous examples are to be found in Shakespeare, one may suffice from this very play ; in Act iii. Sc. 4, Polonius says :—

“ He will come straight.”

And Malone cites from G. Herbert's Jacula Prudentum, 1651 :—“ There is no churchyard so handsome that a man would desire straight to be buried there.”

Ophelia is dead
 she thinks she is she better, but it is for a name happiness.

2 Clo. Why, 'tis found so.

1 Clo. It must be se offendendo ; it cannot be else. For here lies the point : If I drown myself wittingly, it argues an act ; and an act hath three branches ; it is, to act, to do, and to perform² ; Argal, she drown'd herself wittingly.

2 Clo. Nay, but hear you, Goodman delver.

1 Clo. Give me leave. Here lies the water ; good ; here stands the man ; good : If the man go to this water, and drown himself, it is, will he, nill he, he goes ; mark you that : but if the water come to him, and drown him, he drowns not himself : Argal, he, that is not guilty of his own death, shortens not his own life.

2 Clo. But is this law ?

1 Clo. Ay, marry is't ; crowner's-quest law.

2 Clo. Will you ha' the truth on't ? If this had not been a gentlewoman, she should have been buried out of christian burial.

1 Clo. Why, there thou say'st : And the more pity ; that great folks should have countenance in this world to drown or hang themselves more than their even-christian³. Come, my spade. There is no ancient

² Warburton says that this is a ridicule on scholastic divisions without distinction ; and of distinctions without difference. Shakespeare certainly aims at the legal subtleties used upon occasion of inquests. Sir John Hawkins points out the case of Dame Hales, in Plowden's Commentaries. Her husband Sir James drowned himself in a fit of insanity (produced, it was supposed, by his having been one of the judges who condemned Lady Jane Grey), and the question was about the forfeiture of a lease. There was a great deal of this law logic used on the occasion, as whether he was the agent or patient ; or in other words (as the clown says), whether he went to the water, or the water came to him.

³ Even-christian, for fellow-christian, was the old mode of expression ; and is to be found in Chaucer and the Chroniclers. Wicliffe has even-servant for fellow-servant. The fact is, that even, like, and equal were synonymous. I will add one more ancient example of the phrase to those cited by Malone :—

gentlemen but gardeners, ditchers, and grave-makers : they hold up Adam's profession.

2 Clo. Was he a gentleman ?

1 Clo. He was the first that ever bore arms.

2 Clo. Why, he had none⁴.

1 Clo. What, art a heathen ? How dost thou understand the scripture ? The scripture says, Adam digged : Could he dig without arms ? I'll put another question to thee : if thou answerest me not to the purpose, confess thyself——

2 Clo. Go to.

1 Clo. What is he, that builds stronger than either the mason, the shipwright, or the carpenter ?

2 Clo. The gallows-maker, for that frame outlives a thousand tenants.

1 Clo. I like thy wit well, in good faith ; the gallows does well : But how does it well ? it does well to those that do ill : now thou dost ill, to say, the gallows is built stronger than the church : argal, the gallows may do well to thee. To't again : come.

2 Clo. Who builds stronger than a mason, a shipwright, or a carpenter ?

1 Clo. Ay, tell me that, and unyoke⁵.

“ For when a man wol rigt knowe,
Al maner of dette that he owe,
Bothe to God that is ful of migt
And to his even cristen rigt.”

Hampole's Speculum Vitæ.

In Alfred's Saxon version of S. Gregory's Pastoralis Cura, we have eƿon-ðeow, consocius.

⁴ This speech and the next, as far as arms, are not in the quarto.

⁵ Ay, tell me that, and unyoke. This was a common phrase for giving over or ceasing to do a thing ; a metaphor derived from the unyoking of oxen at the end of their labour. Thus in a dittie of the Workmen of Dover, preserved in the additions to Holinshed :—

“ My bow is broke, I would unyoke,
My foot is sore, I can worke no more.”

These pithy questions were doubtless the fireside amusement of

2 Clo. Marry, now I can tell.

1 Clo. To't.

2 Clo. Mass, I cannot tell.

Enter HAMLET and HORATIO, at a distance.

1 Clo. Cudgel thy brains no more about it; for your dull ass will not mend his pace with beating: and, when you are ask'd this question next, say, a grave-maker; the houses that he makes, last till doomsday. Go, get thee to Yaughan and fetch me a stoup of liquor. [Exit 2 Clown.]

1 Clown digs, and sings.

*In youth, when I did love, did love*⁶,

Methought, it was very sweet,

To contract, O, the time, for, ah, my behove

O, methought, there was nothing meet.

Ham. Has this fellow no feeling of his business? a' sings in grave-making^a.

our rustic ancestors. Steevens mentions a collection of them in print, preserved in a volume of scarce tracts in the university library at Cambridge, D. 5. 2. "The innocence of these de-maundes joyous," he says, "may deserve a praise not always due to their delicacy."

⁶ The original ballad from whence these stanzas are taken is printed in Tottel's Miscellany, or "Songes and Sonnettes" by Lord Surrey and others, 1575. The ballad is attributed to Lord Vaux, and is printed by Dr. Percy in the first volume of his Reliques of Antient Poetry. The ohs and the ahs were most probably meant to express the interruption of the song by the forcible emission of the grave-digger's breath at each stroke of the mattock. The original runs thus:—

"I lothe that I did love;

In youth that I thought swete:

As time requires for my behove,

Methinks they are not mete.

"For age with stealing steps

Hath claude me with his crowch;

And lusty youthe away he leaps,

As there had bene none such."

^a The folio has "that he sings at grave-making.

Hor. Custom hath made it in him a property of easiness.

Ham. 'Tis e'en so : the hand of little employment hath the daintier sense.

1 Clo. *But age, with his stealing steps,
Hath claw'd me in his clutch,
And hath shipped me into the land,
As if I had never been such.*

[Throws up a skull.

Ham. That scull had a tongue in it, and could sing once : How the knave jowls it to the ground, as if it were Cain's jawbone, that did the first murder ! This might be the pate of a politician, which this ass now o'erreaches⁷ ; one that would circumvent God, might it not ?

Hor. It might, my lord.

Ham. Or of a courtier ; which could say, Good-morrow, sweet lord ! How dost thou, good lord ? This might be my lord such-a-one, that praised my lord such-a-one's horse, when he meant to beg it ; might it not⁸ ?

Hor. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Why, e'en so, and now my lady Worm's ; chapless, and knock'd about the mazzard with a sexton's spade : Here's fine revolution, an we had the trick to see't. Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at loggats⁹ with them ? mine ache to think on't.

1 Clo. A pickaxe and a spade, a spade, [Sings.

⁷ The folio reads, ore-offices.

⁸ " My lord, you gave

Good words the other day of a bay courser

I rode on ; it is yours, because you liked it."

Timon of Athens, Act i.

⁹ Loggats are small logs or pieces of wood. Hence loggats was the name of an ancient rustic game, in which a stake was fixed in the ground at which loggats were thrown ; in short, a ruder kind of quoit play.

For and¹⁰ a shrouding sheet :
 O, a pit of clay for to be made
 For such a guest is meet.

[Throws up a skull.

Ham. There's another : Why may not that be the scull of a lawyer ? Where be his quiddits¹¹ now, his quilletts, his cases, his tenures, and his tricks ? why does he suffer this rude knave now to knock him about the sconce¹² with a dirty shovel, and will not tell him of his action of battery ? Humph ! This fellow might be in's time a great buyer of land, with his statutes, his recognizances, his fines, his double vouchers¹³, his recoveries : Is this the fine of his fines, and the recovery of his recoveries¹⁴, to have his fine pate full of fine dirt ? will his vouchers vouch him no more of his purchases, and double ones too, than the length and breadth of a pair of indentures ? The very conveyances

¹⁰ For and, as Mr. Dyce has shown, is equivalent to, "And eke," as it stands in Percy's Reliques.

¹¹ Quiddits are quirks, or subtle questions; and quilletts are nice and frivolous distinctions. The etymology of this last foolish word has plagued many learned heads. I think that Blount, in his Glossography, clearly points out quodlibet as the origin of it. It became quidlibet, quiblet, and then quillet, which Bishop Wilkins calls "a frivolousness;" and Coles in his Latin Dict. res frivola. I find the quarto of 1603 has quirks instead of quiddits.

¹² Sconce, i. e. head. See Comedy of Errors, Act i. Sc. 2, note 6.

¹³ Shakespeare here is profuse of his legal learning. Ritson, a lawyer, shall interpret for him:—"A recovery with double voucher, is the one usually suffered, and is so called from two persons (the latter of whom is always the common cryer, or some such inferior person) being successively voucher, or called upon to warrant the tenant's title. Both fines and recoveries are fictions of law, used to convert an estate tail into a fee simple. Statutes are (not acts of parliament) but statutes merchant, and staple, particular modes of recognizance or acknowledgment for securing debts, which thereby become a charge upon the party's land. Statutes and recognizances are constantly mentioned together in the covenants of a purchase deed."

¹⁴ "Is this the fine of his fines, and the recovery of his recoveries:" omitted in the quarto.

of his lands will hardly lie in this box ; and must the inheritor himself have no more ? ha ?

Hor. Not a jot more, my lord.

Ham. Is not parchment made of sheep-skins ?

Hor. Ay, my lord, and of calf-skins too.

Ham. They are sheep, and calves, which seek out assurance¹⁵ in that. I will speak to this fellow :—
Whose grave's this, sirrah ?

1 Clo. Mine, sir.

O, a pit of clay for to be made [Sings.
For such a guest is meet.

Ham. I think it be thine, indeed, for thou liest in't.

1 Clo. You lie out on't, sir, and therefore it is not yours : for my part, I do not lie in't, yet it is mine.

Ham. Thou dost lie in't, to be in't, and say it is thine : 'tis for the dead, not for the quick ; therefore thou liest.

1 Clo. 'Tis a quick lie, sir ; 'twill away again, from me to you.

Ham. What man dost thou dig it for ?

1 Clo. For no man, sir.

Ham. What woman then ?

1 Clo. For none neither.

Ham. Who is to be buried in't ?

1 Clo. One, that was a woman, sir ; but, rest her soul, she's dead.

Ham. How absolute the knave is ! we must speak by the card¹⁶, or equivocation will undo us. By the lord, Horatio, these three¹⁷ years I have taken note of it ; the age is grown so picked¹⁸, that the toe of ¹⁵ A quibble is intended. Deeds (of parchment) are called the common assurances of the realm.

¹⁶ To speak by the card is to speak precisely, by rule, or according to a prescribed course. It is a metaphor from the seaman's card or chart by which he guides his course.

¹⁷ Seven, quarto 1603.

¹⁸ Picked is curious, over nice. Thus in the Cambridge Dict the peasant comes so near the heel of the courtier, he galls his kibe.—How long hast thou been a grave-maker?

1 Clo. Of all the days i' the year, I came to't that day that our last king Hamlet overcame Fortinbras¹⁹.

Ham. How long is that since?

1 Clo. Cannot you tell that? every fool can tell that: It was that very day that young Hamlet was born²⁰: he that is mad, and sent into England.

Ham. Ay, marry, why was he sent into England?

1 Clo. Why, because he was mad: he shall recover his wits there; or, if he do not, 'tis no great matter there.

Ham. Why?

1 Clo. 'Twill not be seen in him there; there the men are as mad as he²¹.

Ham. How came he mad?

1 Clo. Very strangely, they say.

Ham. How strangely?

1 Clo. 'Faith, e'en with losing his wits.

Ham. Upon what ground?

1 Clo. Why, here in Denmark: I have been sexton here, man and boy, thirty years.

Ham. How long will a man lie i' the earth ere he rot?

1594:—"Conquisitus, exquisite, and picked, perfite, fine, dainty, curious." See King John, Act i. Sc. 1, p. 259.

¹⁹ "Look you, here's a skull hath been here this dozen year, let me see, ay, ever since our last King Hamlet slew Fortenbrasse in combat: young Hamlet's father, he that's mad."—Quarto of 1603. It will be seen that the poet places this event thirty years ago in the present copy. See the next note by Sir William Blackstone.

²⁰ "By this scene it appears that Hamlet was then thirty years old, and knew Yorick well, who had been dead twenty-three years. And yet in the beginning of the play he is spoken of as a very young man, one that designed to go back to school, i. e. to the university of Wittenburgh. The poet in the fifth act had forgot what he wrote in the first."—Blackstone.

²¹ "Nimirum insanus paucis videatur; eo quod
Maxima pars hominum morbo jactatur eodem."

Horat. Sat. 3, Lib. ii

1 Clo. 'Faith, if he be not rotten before he die (as we have many pocky corses now-a-days, that will scarce hold the laying in), he will last you some eight year, or nine year : a tanner will last you nine year.

Ham. Why he more than another ?

1 Clo. Why, sir, his hide is so tann'd with his trade, that he will keep out water a great while ; and your water is a sore decayer of your whoreson dead body. Here's a scull now hath lain you i' the earth three-and-twenty years.

Ham. Whose was it ?

1 Clo. A whoreson mad fellow's it was ; Whose do you think it was ?

Ham. Nay, I know not.

1 Clo. A pestilence on him for a mad rogue, a' pour'd a flagon of Rhenish on my head once. This same scull, sir, this same scull, sir, was Yorick's scull, the king's jester.

Ham. This ?

1 Clo. E'en that.

Ham. Let me see [Takes the scull]. Alas, poor Yorick !—I knew him, Horatio ; a fellow of infinite jest, of most excellent fancy : he hath borne me on his back a thousand times ; and now, how abhorred in my imagination it is ! my gorge rises at it. Here hung those lips, that I have kiss'd I know not how oft. Where be your gibes now ? your gambols ? your songs ? your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table on a roar ? Not one now, to mock your own grinning²² ? quite chap-fallen ? Now get you to my lady's chamber²³, and tell her, let her paint an inch thick, to this favour²⁴ she must come ; make her laugh at that.—'Pr'ythee, Horatio, tell me one thing.

²² The folio has jeering.

²³ The quartos, except that of 1603, have table.

²⁴ Favour is countenance, appearance.

Hor. What's that, my lord?

Ham. Dost thou think, Alexander look'd o' this fashion i' the earth?

Hor. E'en so.

Ham. And smelt so? pah! [Throws down the Scull.]

Hor. E'en so, my lord.

Ham. To what base uses we may return, Horatio! Why may not imagination trace the noble dust of Alexander, till he find it stopping a bunghole?

Hor. 'Twere to consider too curiously, to consider so.

Ham. No, 'faith, not a jot; but to follow him thither with modesty enough, and likelihood to lead it: As thus; Alexander died, Alexander was buried, Alexander returneth to dust; the dust is earth; of earth we make loam: And why of that loam, whereto he was converted, might they not stop a beer barrel?

Imperious²⁵ Cæsar, dead, and turn'd to clay,

Might stop a hole to keep the wind away:

O, that that earth, which kept the world in awe,

Should patch a wall t'expel the winter's flaw²⁶!

Enter Priests, &c. in Procession; the Corpse of OPHELIA, LAERTES and Mourners following; King, Queen, their Trains, &c.

But soft! but soft! aside:—Here comes the king,
The queen, the courtiers: Who is this they follow?
And with such maimed rites! This doth betoken,
The corse, they follow, did with desperate hand
Fordo²⁷ its own life. 'Twas of some estate²⁸.

²⁵ Imperial is substituted in the folio. Vide Troilus and Cressida, Act iv. Sc. 5, p. 257, note 24.

²⁶ A flaw is a violent gust of wind. See Coriolanus, Act v. Sc. 3, p. 434, note 9.

²⁷ To fordo is to undo, to destroy. Thus in Othello:—

“This is the night

That either makes me or *fordo*es me quite.”

“Would to God it might be leful for me to fordo myself, or to Couch we awhile, and mark.

[Retiring with HORATIO.

Laer. What ceremony else?

Ham.

That is Laertes,

A very noble youth: Mark.

Laer. What ceremony else?

1 *Priest*²⁹. Her obsequies have been as far enlarg'd
As we have warrant: Her death was doubtful;
And, but that great command o'ersways the order,
She should in ground unsanctified have lodg'd
Till the last trumpet; for charitable prayers,
Shards³⁰, flints, and pebbles, should be thrown on her,
Yet here she is allow'd her virgin crants³¹,
Her maiden strewments, and the bringing home
Of bell and burial.

Laer. Must there no more be done?

1 Priest.

No more be done!

We should profane the service of the dead,
To sing a *requiem*³², and such rest to her make an end of me."—Acolastus, 1529. The old copies have here, as elsewhere, it for its.

²⁸ Estate for rank. Estates was a common term for persons of rank.

²⁹ The quarto has, Doctor.

³⁰ "Shards, quasi shreds," as Tooke says, "the past participle of the verb rcýpan, to sheer, cut off, or divide. It does not only mean fragments of pots and tiles, but rubbish of any kind." Baret has "*shard*es of stones, fragmentum lapidis;" and "*shard*es, or pieces of stones broken and shattred, rubbel or rubbish of old houses." Our version of the Bible has preserved to us pot-sherds; and I have heard bricklayers, in Surrey and Sussex, use the compounds tile-sherds, slate-sherds, &c.

³¹ i. e. garlands. Still used in most northern languages, but no other example of its use among us has yet offered itself. It is thought that Shakespeare may have met with the word in some old history of Hamlet, which furnished him with his fable. In the first folio it is changed for rites, a less appropriate word. Warburton boldly substituted chants, and Mr. Alexander Chalmers affirms that this is the true word, notwithstanding what follows!

³² The folio has "sage requiem." A requiem is a mass sung

As to peace-parted souls.

Laer. Lay her i' the earth ;—
And from her fair and unpolluted flesh,
May violets spring³³ !—I tell thee, churlish priest,
A minist'ring angel shall my sister be,
When thou liest howling.

Ham. What ! the fair Ophelia ?

Queen. Sweets to the sweet : Farewell !

[Scattering Flowers.

I hop'd, thou shouldst have been my Hamlet's wife ;
I thought, thy bride-bed to have deck'd, sweet maid,
And not t'have strew'd thy grave.

Laer. O, treble woe
Fall ten times treble on that cursed head,
Whose wicked deed thy most ingenious sense
Depriv'd thee of !—Hold off the earth awhile,
Till I have caught her once more in mine arms :

[Leaps into the Grave.

Now pile your dust upon the quick and dead ;
Till of this flat a mountain you have made
To o'ertop old Pelion, or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus.

Ham. [Advancing.] What is he, whose grief
Bears such an emphasis ? whose phrase of sorrow
Conjures the wand'ring stars, and makes them stand
Like wonder-wounded hearers ? this is I,
Hamlet the Dane.

[Leaps into the Grave.

Laer. The devil take thy soul !

[Grappling with him.

Ham. Thou pray'st not well.
I pr'ythee, take thy fingers from my throat ;
For, though I am not splenetic and rash, for the rest of the soul of the dead. So called from the words—“Requiem æternam dona eis, Domine,” &c.
part of the service.

³³ “*E tumulo fortunataque favilla
Nascentur violæ ?*”

Persius, Sat. i.

Yet have I in me something dangerous,
Which let thy wisdom fear: Hold off thy hand³⁴.

King. Pluck them asunder.

Queen. Hamlet! Hamlet!

All. Gentlemen,——

Hor. Good my lord, be quiet.

[The Attendants part them, and they come out of the Grave.]

Ham. Why, I will fight with him upon this theme,
Until my eyelids will no longer wag.

Queen. O my son! what theme?

Ham. I lov'd Ophelia; forty thousand brothers
Could not, with all their quantity of love
Make up my sum.—What wilt thou do for her?

King. O, he is mad, Laertes.

Queen. For love of God, forbear him.

Ham. 'Swounds, show me what thou'lt do:
Woo't weep? woo't fight? woo't fast? woo't tear thyself?

Woo't drink up Esile³⁵, eat a crocodile?

³⁴ The folio:—

“Which let thy wisenes fear: Away thy hand.”

³⁵ The quarto of 1603 reads:—“Wilt drink up vessels;” and instead of Ossa, Oosell. Woo't or woot'o, in the northern counties, is the common contraction of wouldst thou, and this is the reading of the old copies. It was a fashion with the gallants of Shakespeare's time to do some extravagant feat as a proof of their love in honour of their mistresses, and among others the swallowing of some nauseous potion was one of the most frequent. Some of the commentators have supposed that by eisell Hamlet meant vinegar, and others that some northern river is meant. But though eisell certainly signified vinegar, it appears that it also signified wormwood, which is what is here meant, as well as in the poet's 111th Sonnet:—

“Whilst like a willing patient I will drink
Potions of Eysell 'gainst my strong infection;
No bitterness, that I will bitter think,
Nor double penance to correct correction.”

Here we see it was a bitter potion which it was a penance to drink. In Thomas's Italian Dictionary, 1562, we have “Assentio

I'll do't.—Dost thou come here to whine?
 To outface me with leaping in her grave?
 Be buried quick with her, and so will I:
 And, if thou prate of mountains, let them throw
 Millions of acres on us; till our ground,
 Singeing his pate against the burning zone,
 Make Ossa like a wart!—Nay, an thou'lt mouth,
 I'll rant as well as thou.

Queen. This is mere madness.
 And thus a while the fit will work on him;
 Anon, as patient as the female dove,
 When that her golden couplets are disclosed³⁶,
 His silence will sit drooping.

Ham. Hear you, sir;
 What is the reason that you use me thus?
 I lov'd you ever: But it is no matter;
 Let Hercules himself do what he may,
 The cat will mew, and dog will have his day. [Exit.]

King. I pray you, good Horatio, wait upon him.—
 [Exit HORATIO.
 Strengthen your patience in our last night's speech;
 [To LAERTES.

We'll put the matter to the present push.—
 Good Gertrude, set some watch over your son.—
 This grave shall have a living monument:

Eysell, and Florio renders the same word by Wormwood. It is probable that the propoma called Absinthites, a nauseously bitter medicament then much in use, may have been in the poet's mind. To drink up a quantity of which would be an extreme pass of amorous demonstration. I must refer to a more extended note on the subject in Notes and Queries, vol. ii. p. 241, and to Mr. Hickson's able defence of it in vol. iii. p. 119, of the same periodical.

³⁶ See note 32 on Act iii. Sc. 1, p. 212. The golden couplets allude to the dove only laying two eggs. The young nestlings when first disclosed are only covered with a yellow down, and the mother rarely leaves the nest, in consequence of the tenderness of her young. This speech in the folio is given to the king.

An hour of quiet thereby³⁷ shall we see ;
Till then, in patience our proceeding be. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. A Hall in the Castle.

Enter HAMLET and HORATIO.

Ham. So much for this, sir : now shall you see the other ;—

You do remember all the circumstance ?

Hor. Remember it, my lord !

Ham. Sir, in my heart there was a kind of fighting, That would not let me sleep : methought, I lay Worse than the mutines¹ in the bilboes². Rashly,— (And prais'd be rashness for it ;—let us know, Our indiscretion sometimes serves us well, When our deep plots do pall³ ; and that should teach us, There's a divinity that shapes our ends, Rough-hew them how we will.

³⁷ So all the quartos after that of 1604. The folio has shortly. The quarto, 1603, has no corresponding line.

² The bilboes were bars of iron with fetters annexed to them, by which mutinous or disorderly sailors were anciently linked together. The word is derived from Bilboa, in Spain, where implements of iron and steel were fabricated. To understand Shakespeare's allusion, it should be known that as these fetters connected the legs of the offenders very closely together, their attempts to rest must be as fruitless as those of Hamlet, in whose mind there was a kind of fighting that would not let him sleep. Every motion of one must disturb his partner in confinement. The bilboes are still shown in the Tower, among the other spoils of the Spanish Armada.

³ The folio has, "our dear plots." To pall was to fade or fall away ; to become, as it were, dead, or without spirit : from the old French pasler. Thus in Antony and Cleopatra :—

"I'll never follow thy pall'd fortunes more."

I have adopted Mr. Tyrwhitt's arrangement of this passage. It is quite evident that rashly must be joined in construction with up from my cabin, and Hamlet's doings recorded in his next speech.

Hor. That is most certain.)

Ham. Up from my cabin,
My sea-gown⁴ scarf'd about me, in the dark
Grop'd I to find out them: had my desire;
Finger'd their packet: and, in fine, withdrew
To mine own room again: making so bold,
My fears forgetting manners, to unseal
Their grand commission; where I found, Horatio,
O royal knavery! an exact command,—
Larded with many several sorts of reasons,—
Importing Denmark's health, and England's too,
With, ho! such bugs⁵ and goblins in my life,—
That, on the supervise⁶, no leisure bated,
No, not to stay the grinding of the axe,
My head should be struck off.

Hor. Is't possible?

Ham. Here's the commission; read it at more leisure.
But wilt thou hear me how I did proceed?

Hor. Ay, 'beseech you.

Ham. Being thus benetted round with villains,
Ere⁷ I could make a prologue to my brains,
They had begun the play;—I sat me down;
Devis'd a new commission; wrote it fair:
I once did hold it, as our statist⁸ do,

⁴ Malone has told us that the sea-gown appears to have been the usual dress of seamen in Shakespeare's time; we may gather from Cotgrave what it was like. "Esclavine, a sea-gowne, a coarse high collar'd and shortsleeved gowne, reaching to the mid-leg, and used mostly by seamen and sailors."

⁵ With, ho! such bugs and goblins in my life, i. e. with such causes of terror arising from my character and designs. Bugs were no less terrific than goblins. We now call them bugbears.

⁶ On the supervise, no leisure bated. The supervise is the looking over; no leisure bated means without any abatement or intermission of time.

⁷ The quarto has or instead of ere, in the same sense of before.

⁸ Statists are statesmen. Blackstone says, that "most of our great men of Shakespeare's time wrote very bad hands; their secretaries very neat ones." This must be taken with some quali-

A baseness to write fair, and labour'd much
 How to forget that learning; but, sir, now
 It did me yeoman's service⁹: Wilt thou know
 Th' effect of what I wrote?

Hor.

Ay, good my lord.

Ham. An earnest conjuration from the king,—
 As England was his faithful tributary;
 As love between them like the palm might flourish;
 As peace should still her wheaten garland wear,
 And stand a co-mere¹⁰ 'tween their amities
 And many such like as's of great charge,—
 That, on the view and know of these contents,
 Without debatement further, more or less,
 He should the bearers put to sudden death,
 Not shriving-time allow'd¹¹.

Hor.

How was this seal'd?

fication; for Elizabeth's two most powerful ministers, Leicester and Burleigh, both wrote good hands. It is certain that there were some who did write most wretched scrawls, but probably not from affectation; though it was accounted a mechanical and vulgar accomplishment to write a fair hand. The worst and most unintelligible scrawls I have met with, are Sir Richard Sackville's, in Elizabeth's time; and the miserable scribbling of Secretary Conway, of whom James said they had given him a secretary that could neither write nor read.

⁹ Yeoman's service I take to be good substantial service. The ancient yeomen were famous for their staunch valour in the field; and Sir Thomas Smyth says, they were "the stable troop of footmen that affraide all France."

¹⁰ The old copies read, "stand a comma 'tween their amities." Johnson supposes that the meaning may be, "Stand as a comma, i. e. as a note of connexion between their amities, to prevent them from being brought to a period." But think of Peace standing as a comma! I have no doubt that we should read:—

"And stand a co-mere 'tween their amities,"

i. e. as a mark defining them. Mere is a boundary mark, the lapis terminalis of the ancients; and it should be remembered that the god of meres or bounds, Terminus, was wont to end the strifes and controversies of people in dividing their lands.

¹¹ Not shriving time allow'd, that is, without allowing time for the confession of their sins. It was a phrase in common use for any short period.

Ham. Why, even in that was heaven ordinant ;
 I had my father's signet in my purse,
 Which was the model of that Danish seal :
 Folded the writ up in form of th'other ;
 Subscrib'd it ; gave't th'impression ; plac'd it safely,
 The changeling never known : Now, the next day
 Was our sea-fight ; and what to this was sequent¹²
 Thou know'st already.

Hor. So Guildenstern and Rosencrantz go to't.

Ham. Why, man, they did make love to this employment ;
 They are not near my conscience ; their defeat
 Does by their own insinuation grow :
 'Tis dangerous, when the baser nature comes
 Between the pass and fell incensed points
 Of mighty opposites.

Hor. Why, what a king is this !

Ham. Does it not, think'st thee, stand me now upon¹³ ?
 He that hath kill'd my king, and whor'd my mother ;
 Popp'd in between th'election and my hopes ;
 Thrown out his angle for my proper life,
 And with such cozenage ; is't not perfect conscience,
 To quit him with this arm ? and is't not to be damn'd,
 To let this canker of our nature come
 In further evil ?

Hor. It must beshortly known to him from England,
 What is the issue of the business there.

Ham. It will be short : the interim's mine ;
 And a man's life no more than to say, one.
 But I am very sorry, good Horatio,

¹² The folio here misprints sement for sequent, and, three lines lower, debate for defeat.

¹³ " Does it not seem to you incumbent upon me to requite him, &c." Vide note upon King Richard II. Act ii. Sc. 3, vol. iv. p. 418. The last three lines of this speech and the three following speeches are not in the quartos.

That to Laertes I forgot myself ;
 For by the image of my cause, I see
 The portraiture of his : I'll court¹⁴ his favours :
 But, sure, the bravery of his grief did put me
 Into a towering passion.

Hor.

Peace ! who comes here ?

*Enter OSRIC*¹⁵.

Osr. Your lordship is right welcome back to Denmark.

Ham. I humbly thank you, sir.—Dost know this water-fly¹⁶ ?

Hor. No, my good lord.

Ham. Thy state is the more gracious ; for 'tis a vice to know him : He hath much land, and fertile ; let a beast be lord of beasts, and his crib shall stand at the king's mess : 'Tis a chough ; but, as I say, spacious in the possession of dirt.

Osr. Sweet lord, if your lordship were at leisure, I should impart a thing to you from his majesty.

Ham. I will receive it, sir, with all diligence of spirit. Your bonnet to his right use ; 'tis for the head.

Osr. I thank your lordship, 'tis very hot.

Ham. No, believe me, 'tis very cold : the wind is northerly.

Osr. It is indifferent cold, my lord, indeed.

Ham. But yet, methinks, it is very sultry and hot ; or my complexion——

Osr. Exceedingly, my lord ; it is very sultry¹⁷,—as 'twere,—I cannot tell how :—My lord, his majesty

¹⁴ The folio has, "I'll count his favours." Rowe corrected it.

¹⁵ The quarto of 1604, "Enter a Courtier." That of 1603, "Enter a braggart Gentleman."

¹⁶ In Troilus and Cressida, Thersites says, "How the poor world is pestered with such water-flies ; diminutives of nature." The gnats and such like ephemeral insects are not inapt emblems of such busy triflers as Osric.

¹⁷ Exceedingly, my lord ; it is very sultry.

"Igniculum brumæ si tempore poscas,

Accipit endromidem ; si dixeris, æstuo, sudat."—Juvenal.

bade me signify to you, that he has laid a great wager on your head: Sir, this is the matter,—

Ham. I beseech you, remember——

[HAMLET moves him to put on his Hat.

[Os. Nay, good my lord; for my ease, in good faith¹⁸. Sir, here is newly come to court, Laertes: believe me, an absolute gentleman, full of most excellent differences¹⁹, of very soft society, and great showing: Indeed, to speak feelingly of him, he is the card²⁰ or calendar of gentry, for you shall find in him the continent²¹ of what part a gentleman would see.

Ham. Sir, his definement suffers no perdition in you;—though, I know, to divide him inventorially, would dizzy the arithmetick of memory, and it²² but yaw neither in respect of his quick sail. But in the verity of extolment, I take him to be a soul of great article; and his infusion of such dearth²³ and rareness, as, to make true diction of him, his semblable is his mirrour; and, who else would trace him, his umbrage, nothing more.

¹⁸ The folio omits this and the following fourteen speeches; and in their place substitutes, “Sir, you are not ignorant of what excellence Laertes is at his weapon.” It seems as if this dialogue was intended to ridicule the affected Euphuism prevalent among those shallow wits about the court, who mistook it for refinement.

¹⁹ i. e. distinguishing excellencies.

²⁰ “The card or calendar of gentry.” The general preceptor of elegance; the card (chart) by which a gentleman is to direct his course; the calendar by which he is to order his time.

²¹ “You shall find in him the continent of what part a gentleman would see.” You shall find him containing and comprising every quality which a gentleman would desire to contemplate for imitation. Perhaps we should read, “You shall find him the continent.” But it may be superfluous to aim at the meaning of Osric’s affected jargon.

²² The folios have, “and yet but raw.” The quarto of 1604 has yaw. Yet was often printed instead of it, which was sometimes written yt. A yaw is that unsteady motion which a ship makes in a great swell, when in steering she inclines to the right or left of her course.

²³ Dearth, according to Tooke, is “the third person singular

Osr. Your lordship speaks most infallibly of him.

Ham. The concernancy, sir? why do we wrap the gentleman in our more rawer breath?

Osr. Sir?

Hor. Is't not possible to understand in another tongue? You will do't, sir, really²⁴.

Ham. What imports the nomination of this gentleman?

Osr. Of Laertes?

Hor. His purse is empty already; all his golden words are spent.

Ham. Of him, sir.

Osr. I know, you are not ignorant——

Ham. I would, you did, sir; yet, in faith, if you did, it would not much approve me²⁵.—Well, sir.

Osr. You are not ignorant of what excellence Laertes is——

Ham. I dare not confess that, lest I should com-

of the verb to dere; it means some cause which dereth, i. e. maketh dear; or hurteth, or doth mischief." That dearth was, therefore, used for scarcity, as well as dearness, appears from the following passage in a MS. petition to the council, by the merchants of London, 6 Edw. VI.: speaking of the causes of the dearness of cloth they say, "This detriment cometh through the dearth of wool, the procurers whereof being a few in number for the augmentation of the same."—Conway papers. See vol. i. p. 463, note 4.

²⁴ Is it not possible to understand in another tongue? You will do't, sir, really. This interrogatory remark is very obscure. The sense may be, "Is it not possible for this fantastic fellow to understand in plainer language? You will, however, imitate his jargon admirably, really, sir." It seems very probable that "another tongue" is an error of the press for "mother tongue."

²⁵ "If you did, it would not tend much toward proving me or confirming me." What Hamlet would have added we know not; but surely Shakespeare's use of the word approve, upon all occasions, is against Johnson's explanation of it—"to recommend to approbation." There is no consistency in the commentators; they rarely look at the prevalent sense of a word in the poet, but explain it many ways, to suit their own views of the meaning of a passage.

pare with him in excellence; but, to know a man well, were to know himself²⁶.

Osr. I mean, sir, for his weapon; but in the imputation laid on him by them, in his meed²⁷ he's unfellowed.]

Ham. What's his weapon?

Osr. Rapier and dagger.

Ham. That's two of his weapons: but, well.

Osr. The king, sir, hath wager'd with him six Barbary horses: against the which he has imponed²⁸, as I take it, six French rapiers and poniards, with their assigns, as girdle, hangers²⁹, and so: Three of the carriages, in faith, are very dear to fancy, very responsive to the hilts, most delicate carriages, and of very liberal conceit.

Ham. What call you the carriages?

[Hor. I knew, you must be edified by the margent³⁰ ere you had done.]

Osr. The carriages, sir, are the hangers.

Ham. The phrase would be more german³¹ to the matter, if we could carry a cannon by our sides; I

²⁶ I dare not confess that, lest I should compare with him, &c. i. e. I dare not pretend to know him, lest I should pretend to an equality: no man can completely know another, but by knowing himself, which is the utmost extent of human wisdom.

²⁷ Meed is merit. Vide King Henry VI. Part III. Act ii. Sc. 1.

²⁸ Imponed. The quartos read impawned. Pignare, in Italian, signifies both to impawn and to lay a wager. The stakes are, indeed, a gage or pledge. Imponed, may only be meant to mark Osrice's affected enunciation of impawned.

²⁹ Hangers, that part of the belt by which the sword was suspended.

³⁰ The margent. The gloss or commentary in old books was usually on the margin of the leaf. This speech is not in the folio.

³¹ i. e. be more nearly related. "Those that are german to him, though fifty times removed, shall come under the hangman."—The Winter's Tale. It is remarkable that this word has also become equally obsolete in French; but Montaigne uses it like Shakespeare for propinquity. "La naïveté n'est elle pas, selon nous, germaine à la sottise."

would, it might be hangers till then. But, on : Six Barbary horses against six French swords, their assigns, and three liberal conceited carriages ; that's the French bet against the Danish : Why is this imponed, as you call it ?

Osr. The king, sir, hath laid, that in a dozen passes between yourself and him, he shall not exceed you three hits³² ; he hath laid on twelve for nine ; and it would come to immediate trial, if your lordship would vouchsafe the answer.

Ham. How, if I answer, no ?

Osr. I mean, my lord, the opposition of your person in trial.

Ham. Sir, I will walk here in the hall : If it please his majesty, it is the breathing time of day with me : let the foils be brought, the gentleman willing, and the king hold his purpose, I will win for him, if I can ; if not, I will gain nothing but my shame, and the odd hits.

Osr. Shall I deliver you so ?

Ham. To this effect, sir ; after what flourish your nature will.

Osr. I commend my duty to your lordship. [Exit.

Ham. Yours, yours.—He does well to commend it himself ; there are no tongues else for's turn.

Hor. This lapwing³³ runs away with the shell on his head.

³² The conditions of the wager are thus given in the quarto of 1603 :—

“Marry, sir, that young Leartes in twelve venies

At rapier and dagger, do not get three odds of you.”

³³ This lapwing runs away with the shell on his head. Horatio means to call Osric a raw, unfledged, foolish fellow. It was a common comparison for a forward fool. Thus in Meres's Wits Treasury, 1598 :—“As the lapwing runneth away with the shell on her head, as soon as she is hatched,” &c.

“Forward lapwing,

He flies with the shell on his head.”—Vittoria Corombona.

Ham. He did comply³⁴ with his dug, before he sucked it. Thus has he (and many more of the same bevy³⁵, that, I know, the drossy age dotes on), only got the tune of the time, and outward habit of encounter³⁶; a kind of yesty collection, which carries them through and through the most fann'd and winnowed opinions³⁷; and do but blow them to their trial, the bubbles are out.

[*Enter a Lord*³⁸.

Lord. My lord, his majesty commended him to you by young Osric, who brings back to him, that you attend him in the hall: He sends to know, if your pleasure hold to play with Laertes, or that you will take longer time.

Ham. I am constant to my purposes, they follow

³⁴ He did comply with his dug, i. e. he did compliment with or embrace his dug, before he sucked it. See note 47, on Act ii. Sc. 2, p. 192.

³⁵ The folio reads, "mine more of the same bevy." Mine is evidently a misprint, and more likely for manie (i. e. many) than nine. The quarto of 1604 reads, "many more of the same breed."

³⁶ Outward habit of encounter is exterior politeness of address.

³⁷ "A kind of yesty collection, which carries them through and through the most fanned and winnowed opinions," &c. The folio reads, "fond and winnowed." The corruption of the quarto, "prophane and trennowed," is not worth attention; and I have no doubt that fond in the folio should be fanned, formerly spelt fan'd, and sometimes even without the apostrophe. Fanned and winnowed are almost always coupled by old writers, for reasons that may be seen under those words in Baret's Alvearie. So Shakespeare himself in Troilus and Cressida:—

"Distinction with a broad and powerful fun, Puffing at all, winnows the light away."

The meaning is, "These men have got the cant of the day, a superficial readiness of slight and cursory conversation, a kind of frothy collection of fashionable prattle, which yet carries them through with the most light and inconsequential judgments; but if brought to the trial by the slightest breath of rational conversation, the bubbles burst; or, in other words, display their emptiness."

³⁸ All that passes between Hamlet and this Lord is omitted in the folio.

the king's pleasure: if his fitness speaks, mine is ready; now, or whensoever, provided I be so able as now.

Lord. The king, and queen, and all are coming down.

Ham. In happy time.

Lord. The queen desires you, to use some gentle entertainment to Laertes, before you fall to play.

Ham. She well instructs me. [Exit Lord.]

Hor. You will lose this wager, my lord.

Ham. I do not think so; since he went into France, I have been in continual practice; I shall win at the odds. Thou wouldst not think, how ill all's here about my heart: but it is no matter.

Hor. Nay, good my lord,——

Ham. It is but foolery; but it is such a kind of gain-giving³⁹, as would, perhaps, trouble a woman.

Hor. If your mind dislike any thing, obey it: I will forestall their repair hither, and say, you are not fit.

Ham. Not a whit, we defy augury; there is a special providence in the fall of a sparrow. If it be now, 'tis not to come; if it be not to come, it will be now; if it be not now, yet it will come: the readiness is all: Since no man, of aught he leaves, knows; what is't to leave betimes⁴⁰? Let be.

³⁹ i. e. misgiving, a giving against, or an internal feeling and prognostic of evil.

⁴⁰ Since no man, of aught he leaves, knows; what is't to leave betimes? This is the reading of the quarto, 1604; the folio reads, "Since no man ha's ought of what he leaves. What is't to leave betimes," and omits Let be. Ha's is evidently here a blunder for knows. Johnson thus interprets the passage:—"Since no man knows ought of the state which he leaves, since he cannot judge what other years may produce, why should we be afraid of leaving life betimes?" Warburton's explanation is very ingenious, but perhaps strains the poet's meaning farther than he intended. "It is true that by death we lose all the goods of life; yet seeing this loss is no otherwise an evil than as we are sensible of it; and since death removes all sense of it, what matters it

Enter King, Queen, LAERTES, Lords, OSRIC, and Attendants, with Foils, &c.

King. Come, Hamlet, come, and take this hand from me.

[The King puts the hand of LAERTES into that of HAMLET.

Ham. Give me your pardon, sir : I have done you wrong ;

But pardon't, as you are a gentleman.

This presence⁴¹ knows,

And you must needs have heard, how I am punish'd With a sore distraction. What I have done,

That might your nature, honour, and exception,

Roughly awake, I here proclaim was madness.

Was't Hamlet wrong'd Laertes ? Never, Hamlet :

If Hamlet from himself be ta'en away,

And, when he's not himself, does wrong Laertes,

Then Hamlet does it not, Hamlet denies it.

Who does it then ? His madness : If't be so,

Hamlet is of the faction that is wrong'd ;

His madness is poor Hamlet's enemy.

Sir, in this audience⁴²,

Let my disclaiming from a purpos'd evil

Free me so far in your most generous thoughts,

That I have shot my arrow o'er the house,

And hurt my brother⁴³.

Laer.

I am satisfied in nature,

how soon we lose them." This argument against the fear of death has been dilated and placed in a very striking light by the late Mr. Green.— See Diary of a Lover of Literature, Ipswich, 1810, 4to. p. 230. Shakespeare himself has elsewhere said, "the sense of death is most in apprehension."

⁴¹ i. e. the king and queen.

⁴² This line is not in the quarto.

⁴³ In the folios the word is mother.

Whose motive, in this case, should stir me most
 To my revenge : but in my terms of honour,
 I stand aloof ; and will no reconciliation,
 Till by some elder masters, of known honour,
 I have a voice and precedent of peace,
 To keep my name ungor'd⁴⁴. But till that time,
 I do receive your offer'd love like love,
 And will not wrong it.

Ham. I embrace it freely ;
 And will this brother's wager frankly play.—
 Give us the foils ; come on.

Laer. Come ; one for me.

Ham. I'll be your foil, Laertes ; in mine ignorance
 Your skill shall, like a star i' the darkest night,
 Stick fiery off indeed.

Laer. You mock me, sir.

Ham. No, by this hand.

King. Give them the foils, young Osric.—Cousin
 Hamlet,

You know the wager ?

Ham. Very well, my lord ;
 Your grace hath laid the odds⁴⁵ o' the weaker side.

King. I do not fear it : I have seen you both :—
 But since he's better'd, we have therefore odds.

Laer. This is too heavy, let me see another.

Ham. This likes me well : These foils have all a length ? [They prepare to play.

Osr. Ay, my good lord.

⁴⁴ i. e. unwounded. This is a piece of satire on fantastical honour. Though nature is satisfied, yet he will ask advice of older men of the sword, whether artificial honour ought to be contented with Hamlet's apology. The folio misprints ungorg'd.

⁴⁵ The king had wagered six Barbary horses to a few rapiers, poniards, &c. that is, about twenty to one. These are the odds here meant. The odds the King means in the next speech were twelve to nine in favour of Hamlet, by Laertes giving him three.

King. Set me the stoups⁴⁶ of wine upon that table :—

If Hamlet give the first or second hit,
 Or quit in answer of the third exchange,
 Let all the battlements their ordnance fire :
 The king shall drink to Hamlet's better breath ;
 And in the cup an union⁴⁷ shall he throw,
 Richer than that which four successive kings
 In Denmark's crown have worn ; Give me the cups ;
 And let the kettle to the trumpet speak,
 The trumpet to the cannoneer without,
 The cannons to the heavens, the heaven to earth,
Now the king drinks to Hamlet.—Come, begin ;—
 And you, the judges, bear a wary eye.

Ham. Come on, sir.

Laer. Come, my lord. [They play.]

Ham. One.

Laer. No.

Ham. Judgement.

Osr. A hit, a very palpable hit.

⁴⁶ Stoup is a common word in Scotland at this day, and denotes a pewter vessel resembling our wine measures ; but of no determinate quantity : for there are gallon-stoups, pint-stoups, matchkin-stoups, &c. The vessel in which water is fetched or kept is also called a water-stoup. A stoup of wine is therefore equivalent to a jug of wine.

⁴⁷ An union is a precious pearl, remarkable for its size. "And hereupon it is that our dainties and delicates here at Rome, &c. call them unions, as a man would say singular, and by themselves alone." To swallow a pearl in a draught seems to have been common to royal and mercantile prodigality. Thus in the second part of If You Know Not Me You Know Nobody :—

"Here sixteen thousand pound at one clap goes
 Instead of sugar. Gresham drinks this pearl
 Unto the queen his mistress."

According to Rondeletus pearls were supposed to have an exhilarating quality. "Uniones quæ a conchis, &c. valde cordiale sunt." Under pretence of throwing a pearl into the cup, the King may be supposed to drop some poisonous drug into the wine. Hamlet subsequently asks him tauntingly, "Is the union here?"

Laer. Well,—again.

King. Stay, give me drink : Hamlet, this pearl is thine ;

Here's to thy health.—Give him the cup.

[Trumpets sound ; and Cannon shot off within.

Ham. I'll play this bout first, set it^a by awhile.

Come.—Another hit ; What say you ? [They play.

Laer. A touch, a touch, I do confess.

King. Our son shall win.

Queen. He's fat, and scant of breath⁴⁸.—

Here, Hamlet, take my napkin, rub thy brows :

The queen carouses to thy fortune, Hamlet.

Ham. Good madam,——

King. Gertrude, do not drink.

Queen. I will, my lord ;—I pray you, pardon me.

King. It is the poison'd cup ! it is too late.

[Aside.

Ham. I dare not drink yet, madam ; by and by.

Queen. Come, let me wipe thy face.

Laer. My lord, I'll hit him now.

King. I do not think't.

Laer. And yet 'tis almost 'gainst my conscience.

[Aside.

Ham. Come, for the third, Laertes : You but dally ;

I pray you, pass with your best violence ;

I am afeard, you make a wanton⁴⁹ of me.

Laer. Say you so ? come on. [They play.

^a The folio omits it, and the quarto “a touch, a touch,” just below.

⁴⁸ It appears from the Epitaph on Burbage that he was celebrated for his performance of Hamlet :—

“ No more young Hamlet, though but scant of breath, Shall cry revenge for his dear father's death.”

And it has been conjectured that the words have reference to the obesity of the actor. The folio reads, “ Here's a napkin ; rub thy brows.”

⁴⁹ i. e. you trifle or play with me as if I were a child. The quarto has “ I am sure.”

Osr. Nothing neither way.

Laer. Have at you now.

[LAERTES wounds HAMLET; then, in scuffling, they change Rapiers, and HAMLET wounds LAERTES.

King. Part them, they are incens'd.

Ham. Nay, come again. † [The Queen falls.

Osr. Look to the queen there, ho!

Hor. They bleed on both sides;—How is't, my lord?

Osr. How is't, Laertes?

Laer. Why, as a woodcock to mine own springe, Osrice;

I am justly kill'd with mine own treachery.

Ham. How does the queen?

King. She swoons to see them bleed.

Queen. No, no, the drink, the drink,—O my dear Hamlet!

The drink, the drink;—I am poison'd! [Dies.

Ham. O villainy!—Ho! let the door be lock'd:

Treachery! seek it out. [LAERTES falls.

Laer. It is here, Hamlet: Hamlet, thou art slain;
No medicine in the world can do thee good,
In thee there is not half an hour of life;
The treacherous instrument is in thy hand,
Unbated⁵⁰, and envenom'd: the foul practice
Hath turn'd itself on me: lo, here I lie,
Never to rise again. Thy mother's poison'd;
I can no more; the king, the king's to blame.

Ham. The point

Envenom'd too!—Then, venom to thy work⁵¹.

[Stabs the King.

⁵⁰ See note on Act iv. Sc. 7.

⁵¹ In the quarto of 1603:—

“The poison'd instrument within my hand?

Then venom to thy venom; die, damn'd villain:

Come drink, here lies thy union here.”

[King dies.

Osr. & Lords. Treason! treason!

King. O, yet defend me, friends, I am but hurt.

Ham. Here, thou incestuous, murd'rous, damned Dane,

Drink off this potion :—Is thy union here ?

Follow my mother.

[King dies.]

Laer. He is justly serv'd ;

It is a poison temper'd by himself.—

Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet :

Mine and my father's death come not upon thee ;

Nor thine on me !

[Dies.]

Ham. Heaven make thee free of it ! I follow thee.

I am dead, Horatio :—Wretched queen, adieu !—

You that look pale and tremble at this chance,

That are but mutes or audience to this act,

Had I but time (as this fell sergeant⁵², death,

Is strict in his arrest), O ! I could tell you,—

But let it be :—Horatio, I am dead ;

Thou liv'st ; report me and my cause aright

To the unsatisfied.

Hor. Never believe it ;

I am more an antique Roman than a Dane,

Ham.

As thou'rt a man,

Give me the cup ; let go ; by heaven, I'll have't.—

O God !—Horatio, what a wounded name,

Things standing thus unknown, shall live behind me !

If thou didst ever hold me in thy heart,

Absent thee from felicity awhile,

And in this harsh world draw thy breath in pain,

⁵² A sergeant was a bailiff or sheriff's officer. Shakespeare, in his 74th Sonnet, has likened death to an arrest :—

When that fell arrest,

Without all bail shall carry me away."

And Joshua Silvester, in his Dubartas :—

"And death, dread sergeant of the eternal Judge, Comes very late to his sole-seated lodge."

To tell my story.— [March afar off, and Shot within.

What warlike noise is this?

Osr. Young Fortinbras, with conquest come from Poland,

To th' ambassadors of England gives this warlike volley.

Ham. O! I die, Horatio;

The potent poison quite o'ercrows⁵³ my spirit;

I cannot live to hear the news from England:

But I do prophesy the election lights

On Fortinbras; he has my dying voice

So tell him, with th'occurents, more and less,

Which have solicited⁵⁴,—The rest is silence. [Dies.

Hor. Now cracks a noble heart;—Good night, sweet prince;

And flights of angels sing thee to thy rest! ☒

Why does the drum come hither? [March within. X

Enter FORTINBRAS, the English Ambassadors, and Others.

Fort. Where is this sight?

Hor. What is it, you would see?

If aught of woe, or wonder, cease your search.

Fort. This quarry cries on havock!⁵⁵—O proud death!

What feast is toward in thine eternal cell,

⁵³ To overcrow is to overcome, to subdue. "These noblemen laboured with tooth and naile to overcrow, and consequently to overthrow one another."—Holinshed's History of Ireland.

⁵⁴ "The occurrants which have solicited"—the occurrences or incidents which have incited." The sentence is left unfinished.

⁵⁵ This quarry cries on havock! To cry on was to exclaim against. "I suppose when unfair sportsmen destroyed more game than was reasonable, the censure was to call it havock."—Johnson.

Quarry was the term used for a heap of slaughtered game. See Macbeth, Act iv. Sc. 3.

That thou so many princes, at a shot
So bloodily hast struck ?

1 Amb. The sight is dismal ;
And our affairs from England come too late :
The ears are senseless, that should give us hearing,
To tell him, his commandment is fulfill'd,
That Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are dead :
Where should we have our thanks ?

Hor. Not from his mouth,
Had it the ability of life to thank you ;
He never gave commandment for their death.
But since, so jump⁵⁶ upon this bloody question,
You from the Polack wars, and you from England,
Are here arriv'd ; give order, that these bodies
High on a stage be placed to the view ;
And let me speak, to the yet unknowing world,
How these things came about : So shall you hear
Of carnal, bloody, and unnatural acts ;
Of accidental judgements, casual slaughters ;
Of deaths put on⁵⁷ by cunning, and forc'd cause ;
And, in this upshot, purposes mistook
Fall'n on the inventors' heads : all this can I Truly deliver.

Fort. Let us haste to hear it.
And call the noblest to the audience.
For me, with sorrow I embrace my fortune ;
I have some rights of memory⁵⁸ in this kingdom,
Which, now to claim, my vantage doth invite me.

Hor. Of that I shall have also cause to speak,
And from his mouth whose voice will draw on more :
But let this same be presently perform'd,

⁵⁶ It has been already observed that jump and just, or exactly, are synonymous. Vide note 10 on Act i. Sc. 1, p. 130.

⁵⁷ i. e. instigated, produced. Instead of "forced cause," the quartos read "for no cause."

⁵⁸ i. e. some rights which are remembered in this kingdom.

Even while men's minds are wild; lest more mis-chance,
 On plots and errors, happen.

Fort.

Let four captains

Bear Hamlet, like a soldier, to the stage;
 For he was likely, had he been put on,
 To have prov'd most royally: and, for his passage,
 The soldier's musick, and the rites of war,
 Speak loudly for him.—

Take up the bodies:—Such a sight as this Becomes the field, but here shows much amiss.

Go, bid the soldiers shoot.

[A dead March.

[Exeunt, bearing off the dead Bodies; after which, a Peal of Ordnance is shot off.

THE following scene in the first quarto, 1603, differs so materially from the revised play, that it has been thought it would not be unacceptable to the reader:—

Enter HORATIO and the Queen.

Hor. Madam, your son is safe arriv'd in Denmark,
This letter I even now receiv'd of him,
Whereas he writes how he escap'd the danger,
And subtle treason that the king had plotted;
Being crossed by the contention of the winds,
He found the packet sent to the king of England,
Wherein he saw himself betray'd to death,
As at his next conversion with your grace
He will relate the circumstance at full.

Queen. Then I perceive there's treason in his looks,
That seem'd to sugar o'er his villainy:
But I will sooth and please him for a time,
For murderous minds are always jealous;
But know not you, Horatio, where he is?

Hor. Yes, madam, and he hath appointed me
To meet him on the east side of the city
To-morrow morning.

Queen. O fail not, good Horatio, and withal commend me
A mother's care to him, bid him a while
Be wary of his presence, lest that he
Fail in that he goes about.

Hor. Madam, never make doubt of that:
I think by this the news be come to court
He is arriv'd: observe the king, and you shall Quickly find, Hamlet being here,
Things fell not to his mind.

Queen. But what became of Gilderstone and Rossencraft

Hor. He being set ashore, they went for England,
And in the packet there writ down that doom
To be perform'd on them 'pointed for him:—
And by great chance he had his father's seal,
So all was done without discovery.

Queen. Thanks be to heaven for blessing of the prince.
Horatio, once again I take my leave,
With thousand mother's blessings to my son.

Hor. Madam, adieu.

KING LEAR.

Cordelia. Time shall unfold what plighted cunning hides :
Who cover faults, at last with shame derides.
Well may you prosper !

France.

Come, my fair Cordelia.

ACT I. SC. 1.

KING LEAR.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THE story of King Lear and his three daughters was originally told by Geoffrey of Monmouth, from whom Holinshed transcribed it; and in his Chronicle Shakespeare had certainly read it: but he seems to have been more indebted to the old anonymous play, printed by Simon Stafford for John Wright in 1605, under the following title of "The True Chronicle History of King Leir and his three Daughters, Gonorill, Ragan, and Cordella. As it hath bene diuers and sundry times lately acted." It is reprinted in the Collection of Plays on which Shakespeare founded, published by Steevens in 1779; which was entered on the Stationers' books by Edward White, May 14, 1594; and there are two other entries of the same piece, May 8, 1605; and Nov. 26, 1607. From the Mirror of Magistrates Shakespeare has taken the hint for the behaviour of the Steward, and the reply of Cordelia to her father, concerning her future marriage. The episode of Gloucester and his sons must have been borrowed from Sidney's Arcadia, no trace of it being found in the other sources of the fable. The reader will also find the story of King Lear in the recently published Metrical Chronicle of Layamon; in the second book and tenth canto of Spenser's Faerie Queene, and in the fifteenth chapter of the third book of Warner's Albion's England. Camden, in his Remaines, under the head of Wise Speeches, tells a similar story to this of Lear, of Ina, king of the West Saxons; which, if the thing ever happened, probably was the real origin of the fable. The story has found its way into many ballads and other metrical pieces; one ballad will be found in Dr. Percy's Reliques of Ancient English Poetry, vol. i. 3d edit. The story is also to be found in the unpublished Gesta Romanorum, and in the Romance of Perceforest. The whole of this play could not have been written till after 1603. Harsnet's Declaration of Popish Impostures, to which it contains so many references, and from which the fantastic names of several spirits are borrowed, was not published till that year. It must have been produced before the Christmas of 1606; for in the entry of Lear on the Stationers' Register, on the 26th of November, 1607, it is expressly recorded to have been played, during the preceding Christmas, before his majesty at Whitehall. The entry is as follows:—"26 Nov. 1607. Na. Butter and Jo. Busby.] Entered for their copie and 'thands of Sir Geo. Bucke, Kt. and the Wardens, a booke called Mr. Willm. Shakespeare his Historye of Kinge Lear, as yt was played before the King's Majestie at Whitehall, upon St. Stephen's night at Christmas last, by his Majesties Servants playing usually at the Globe on the Bank-side." Malone, therefore, with great probability, places the date of the composition in 1605.

An anonymous writer, who has instituted a comparison between the Lear of Shakespeare and the Œdipus of Sophocles, and justly given the palm to the former, closes his essay with the following sentence, to which every reader of taste and feeling will subscribe:—"There is no detached character in Shakespeare's writings which displays so vividly as this the hand and mind of a master; which exhibits so great a variety of excellence, and such amazing powers of delineation; so intimate a knowledge of the human heart, with such exact skill in tracing the progress and the effects of its more violent and more delicate passions. It is in the management of this character more especially that he fills up that grand idea of a perfect poet, which we delight to image to ourselves, but despair of seeing realised.*"

In the same work from whence this is extracted will be found an article, entitled "Theatralia," attributed to the pen of Charles Lamb, in which are the following striking animadversions on the liberty taken in changing the catastrophe of this tragedy in representation. "The Lear of Shakespeare cannot be acted. The contemptible machinery with which they mimic the storm he goes out in, is not more inadequate to represent the horrors of the real elements, than any actor can be to represent Lear. The greatness of Lear is not in corporal dimension, but in intellectual: the explosions of his passions are terrible as a volcano; they are storms turning up and disclosing to the bottom that rich sea, his mind, with all its vast riches: it is his mind which is laid bare. This case of flesh and blood seems too insignificant to be thought on; even as he himself neglects it. On the stage we see nothing but corporal infirmities and weakness, the impotence of age; while we read it we see not Lear, but we are Lear;—we are in his mind; we are sustained by a grandeur, which baffles the malice of his daughters and storms; in the aberrations of his reason, we discover a mighty irregular power of reasoning, unmethodised from the ordinary purposes of life, but exerting its powers, as the wind blows where it listeth, at will on the corruptions and abuses of mankind. What have looks or tones to do with that sublime identification of his age with that of the heavens themselves, when, in his reproaches to them for conniving at the injustice of his children, he reminds them that 'they themselves are old!' What gesture shall we appropriate to this? What has voice or the eye to do with such things? But the play is beyond all art, as the tamperings with it show: it is too hard and stony; it must have love-scenes, and a happy ending. It is not enough that Cordelia is a daughter, she must shine as a lover too. Tate has put his hook in the nostrils of this Leviathan, for Garrick and his followers, the showmen of the scene, to draw it about more easily. A happy ending!—as if the living martyrdom that Lear had gone through, the flaying of his feelings alive, did not make a fair dismissal from the stage of life the only decorous thing for him. If he is to live and be happy after, if he could sustain this world's burden after, why all this pudder and preparation—why torment us with all this unnecessary sympathy? As if the childish pleasure of getting his gilt robes and sceptre again could tempt him to act over again his misused station,—as if at his years, and with his experience, any thing was left but to die."

* The Reflector, vol. ii. p. 139, on Greek and English Tragedy.

KING LEAR.

ACT I.

SCENE I. A Room of State in King Lear's Palace.

Enter KENT, GLOSTER, and EDMUND.

Kent.

THOUGHT the king had more affected the duke of Albany, than Cornwall.

Glo. It did always seem so to us: but now, in the division of the kingdom¹, it appears not which of the dukes he values most; for equalities² are so weigh'd, that curiosity³ in neither can make choice of either's moiety⁴.

Kent. Is not this your son, my lord?

Glo. His breeding, sir, hath been at my charge: I have so often blush'd to acknowledge him, that now I am brazed to it.

Kent. I cannot conceive you.

Glo. Sir, this young fellow's mother could: where-

¹ Johnson is wrong in his view of this passage; what can be plainer than that Lear has predetermined the division of his kingdom, and only alters it when Cordelia disappoints and vexes him?

² The folio has qualities.

³ Curiosity is scrupulous exactness, finical precision. See vol. viii. p. 331, note 43.

⁴ Moiety is used by Shakespeare for part or portion. See King Henry IV. Part I. p. 75, note 7.

upon she grew round-womb'd ; and had, indeed, sir, a son for her cradle, ere she had a husband for her bed. Do you smell a fault ?

Kent. I cannot wish the fault undone, the issue of it being so proper⁵.

Glo. But I have a son, sir, by order of law, some year elder than this, who yet is no dearer in my account : though this knave came something saucily into the world before he was sent for, yet was his mother fair ; there was good sport at his making, and the whoreson must be acknowledged.—Do you know this noble gentleman, Edmund ?

Edm. No, my lord.

Glo. My lord of Kent : remember him hereafter as my honourable friend.

Edm. My services to your lordship.

Kent. I must love you, and sue to know you better.

Edm. Sir, I shall study deserving.

Glo. He hath been out nine years, and away he shall again.—The king is coming.

[Trumpets sound within.]

Enter LEAR, CORNWALL, ALBANY, GONERIL, REGAN, CORDELIA, and Attendants.

Lear. Attend the lords of France and Burgundy, Gloster.

Glo. I shall, my liege⁶.

[Exeunt GLOSTER and EDMUND.]

Lear. Mean time we shall express our darker⁷ purpose.

⁵ Proper is comely, handsome. See Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act iv. Sc. 1, note 1.

⁶ The folio has lord.

⁷ We shall express our darker purpose; that is “we have already made known our desire of parting the kingdom; we will now discover what has not been told before, the reasons by which we shall regulate the partition.” This interpretation will justify or palliate the exordial dialogue.—Johnson.

Give me the map there.—Know, that we have divided,
 In three, our kingdom ; and 'tis our fast intent⁸
 To shake all cares and business from our age ;
 Conferring⁹ them on younger strengths, while we Unburden'd crawl toward death.—Our son of Cornwall,

And you, our no less loving son of Albany,
 We have this hour a constant will¹⁰ to publish
 Our daughters' several dowers, that future strife
 May be prevented now. The princes, France and Burgundy,

Great rivals in our youngest daughter's love,
 Long in our court have made their amorous sojourn,
 And here are to be answer'd.—Tell me, my daughters
 (Since now we will divest us, both of rule, Interest of territory, cares of state¹¹),
 Which of you, shall we say, doth love us most ?
 That we our largest bounty may extend
 Where nature doth with merit challenge.—Goneril,
 Our eldest-born, speak first.

Gon. Sir, I love you more than words can wield the matter ;

Dearer than eye-sight, space, and liberty ;
 Beyond what can be valued, rich or rare ;
 No less than life, with grace, health, beauty, honour :
 As much as child e'er loved, or father found.
 A love that makes breath poor, and speech unable :
 Beyond all manner of so much I love you¹².

⁸ i. e. our determined resolution. The quartos read, "first intent."

⁹ The quartos read, confirming.

¹⁰ Constant will, which is a confirmation of the reading "fast intent," means a firm, determined will : it is the certa voluntas of Virgil. The lines from while we to prevented now are omitted in the quartos.

¹¹ The two lines in a parenthesis are omitted in the quartos.

¹² "Beyond all assignable quantity. I love you beyond limits, and cannot say it is so much ; for how much soever I should name,

Cor. What shall Cordelia do?¹³ Love, and be silent.

[Aside.

Lear. Of all these bounds, even from this line to this,
With shadowy forests and with champains rich'd¹⁴,
With plenteous rivers and wide-skirted meads,
We make thee lady : To thine and Albany's issue
Be this perpetual.—What says our second daughter,
Our dearest Regan, wife to Cornwall? Speak.

Reg. I am made of that self metal as my sister,
And prize me at her worth¹⁵. In my true heart
I find, she names my very deed of love ;
Only she comes too short,—that I profess
Myself an enemy to all other joys,
Which the most spacious sphere¹⁶ of sense possesses ;
And find, I am alone felicitate
In your dear highness' love.

Cor. Then poor Cordelia ! [Aside.
And yet not so ; since, I am sure, my love's
More richer¹⁷ than my tongue.

Lear. To thee, and thine, hereditary ever,
Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom ;
No less in space, validity¹⁸, and pleasure, it would yet be more." Thus Rowe, in his Fair Penitent, Sc. 1 :—

" I can only

Swear you reign here, but never tell how much."

¹³ The folio has, speak.

¹⁴ i. e. enriched. So Drant in his translation of Horace's Epistles, 1567 :—

" To ritch his country, let his words lyke flowing water fall."

¹⁵ That is, estimate me at her value, my love has at least equal claim to your favour. Only she comes short of me in this, that I profess myself an enemy to all other joys which sense can bestow."

¹⁶ The quartos have, "Which the most precious square of sense possesses." The folio misprints professes for possesses. The correction was made by me before I had seen the notes from Mr. Collier's corrected folio, which suggest sphere for square, but leave the corruption of precious for spacious untouched.

¹⁷ The folio, "More ponderous."

¹⁸ Validity is several times used to signify worth, value, by Shakespeare. It does not, however, appear to have been peculiar

Than that conferr'd¹⁹ on Goneril.—Now, our joy,
 Although our last, and least²⁰; to whose young love
 The vines of France, and milk of Burgundy,
 Strive to be interest'd²¹: what can you say, to draw
 A third more opulent than your sisters? Speak.

Cor. Nothing, my lord.

Lear. Nothing?

Cor. Nothing.

Lear. Nothing can come of nothing: speak again.

Cor. Unhappy that I am, I cannot heave
 My heart into my mouth: I love your majesty
 According to my bond; no more, nor less.

Lear. How, how, Cordelia? mend your speech a little,

Lest it²² may mar your fortunes.

Cor.

Good my lord,

You have begot me, bred me, lov'd me: I
 Return those duties back as are right fit,
 Obey you, love you, and most honour you.
 Why have my sisters husbands, if they say,
 They love you all? Haply, when I shall wed, to him in this sense. "The countenance of your friend is of less value than his council, yet both of very small validity."—The Devil's Charter, 1607.

¹⁹ The folio reads, conferr'd; the quartos, confirm'd. So in a former passage we have in the quartos confirming for conferring. See note 9, p. 325.

²⁰ Thus the folio. The quartos have:—

"Although the last not least in our dear love,
 What can you say to win a third more opulent
 Than your sisters?"

²¹ To interest and to interesse are not, perhaps, different spellings of the same verb, but two distinct words, though of the same import; the one being derived from the Latin, the other from the French interessier. We have interest'd in Ben Jonson's Sejanus:—

"Our sacred laws and just authority
 Are interest'd therein."

Drayton also uses the word in the Preface to his Polyolbion.

²² Thus the quartos. The folios read, "Lest you may;" and in Lear's former speech, "Nothing will come of nothing."

That lord, whose hand must take my plight, shall carry
Half my love with him, half my care, and duty²³ :

Sure, I shall never marry like my sisters,

[To love my father all²⁴.]

Lear. But goes thy heart with this ?

Cor.

Ay, good my lord.

Lear. So young, and so untender ?

Cor. So young, my lord, and true.

Lear. Let it be so,—Thy truth then be thy dow'r :
For, by the sacred radiance of the sun,
The mysteries^a of Hecate, and the night ;
By all the operation of the orbs,
From whom we do exist, and cease to be ;
Here I disclaim all my paternal care,
Propinquity and property of blood,
And as a stranger to my heart and me
Hold thee, from this, for ever. The barbarous Scythian,
Or he that makes his generation²⁵ messes
To gorge his appetite, shall to my bosom
Be as well neighbour'd, pitied, and reliev'd,
As thou my sometime daughter.

Kent.

Good my liege,—

Lear. Peace, Kent !

Come not between the dragon and his wrath :

I lov'd her most, and thought to set my rest

On her kind nursery.—Hence, and avoid my sight !—

[To CORDELIA.

²³ So in The Mirror for Magistrates, 1587, Cordelia says :—

“ Nature so doth bind me, and compel

To love you as I ought, my father, well ;

Yet shortly may I chance, if fortune will,

To find in heart to bear another more good will :

Thus much I said of nuptial loves that meant.”

²⁴ This hemistich is not in the folio. In the next line the quarto reads, “ But goes this with thy heart.”

^a So the second folio. The quarto misprints mistresse ; the folio, miseries.

²⁵ i. e. his children.

So be my grave my peace, as here I give Her father's heart from her!—Call France.—Who stirs?

Call Burgundy.—Cornwall, and Albany,
With my two daughters' dow'rs digest this third:
Let pride, which she calls plainness, marry her.
I do invest you jointly with my power,
Pre-eminence, and all the large effects
That troop with majesty.—Ourself, by monthly course,
With reservation of a hundred knights,
By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode
Make with you by due turns. Only we still retain^a
The name, and all the addition²⁶ to a king;
The sway, revenue, execution of the rest²⁷,
Beloved sons, be yours: which to confirm,
This coronet part between you. [Giving the Crown.

Kent.

Royal Lear,

Whom I have ever honour'd as my king,
Lov'd as my father, as my master follow'd,
As my great patron thought on in my prayers²⁸,—

Lear. The bow is bent and drawn, make from the shaft.

Kent. Let it fall rather, though the fork invade
The region of my heart: be Kent unmannerly,
When Lear is mad. What would'st thou do, old man?
Think'st thou, that duty shall have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flatt'ry bows? To plainness honour's bound

When majesty stoops to folly. Reserve thy state²⁹;

^a In this line the folio prints turne, and shall for still.

²⁶ All the titles belonging to a king. The quartos have, additions. See vol. vii. p. 158, note 5; p. 208, note 34.

²⁷ By the execution of the rest, all the other functions of the kingly office are probably meant.

²⁸ The allusion seems to be to the custom of clergymen praying for their patrons in what is called the bidding prayer.

²⁹ The quarto reads, "Reverse thy doom; and has "falls to

And, in thy best consideration, check
 This hideous rashness : answer my life my judgement,
 Thy youngest daughter does not love thee least ;
 Nor are those empty-hearted, whose low sounds
 Reverb³⁰ no hollowness.

Lear. Kent, on thy life, no more.

Kent. My life I never held but as a pawn
 To wage against thine enemies³¹, nor fear to lose it,
 Thy safety being the motive.

Lear. Out of my sight !

Kent. See better, Lear, and let me still remain
 The true blank³² of thine eye.

Lear. Now, by Apollo,—

Kent. Now, by Apollo, king,
 Thou swear'st thy gods in vain.

Lear. O, vassal ! miscreant !^a

[Laying his Hand on his Sword.]

Alb. Corn. Dear sir, forbear.

Kent. Do ;

folly." The meaning of answer my life my judgment is, Let my life be answerable for my judgment, or I will stake my life on my opinion.

³⁰ This is perhaps a word of the poet's own, meaning the same as reverberate. The quarto has sound and reverbs.

³¹ That is, "I never regarded my life as my own, but merely as a thing of which I had the possession, not the property; and which was entrusted to me as a pawn or pledge, to be employed in waging war against your enemies. "To wage," says Bullokar, "to undertake, or give security for performance of any thing."

The expression to wage against is used in a Letter from Guil. Webbe to Robt. Wilmot, prefixed to Tancred and Gismund, 1592 :—"You shall not be able to wage against me in the charges growing upon this action. Geo. Wither, in his verses before the Polyolbion, says :—

"Good speed befall thee who hath wag'd a task
 That better censures and rewards doth ask."

³² The blank is the mark at which men shoot. "See better," says Kent, "and let me be the mark to direct your sight, that you err not."

^a The quarto has recreant, and omits the words, Dear sir, forbear. In Kent's speech it has doom for gift, the reading of the folio.

Kill thy physician, and the fee bestow
 Upon the foul disease. Revoke thy gift ;
 Or, whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
 I'll tell thee, thou dost evil.

Lear. Hear me, recreant^b ! On thine allegiance hear me !—

Since thou hast sought to make us break our vow,
 (Which we durst never yet), and, with strain'd pride,
 To come betwixt our sentence and our power
 (Which nor our nature nor our place can bear) ;
 Our potency made³³ good, take thy reward.
 Five days we do allot thee, for provision
 To shield thee from diseases³⁴ of the world ;
 And, on the sixth, to turn thy hated back
 Upon our kingdom : if, on the tenth day following,
 Thy banish'd trunk be found in our dominions,
 The moment is thy death. Away ! By Jupiter,
 This shall not be revok'd.

Kent. Fare thee well, king : since thus thou wilt appear,
 Freedom³⁵ lives hence, and banishment is here.—

^b The quartos omit recreant. The folio has That instead of Since in the next line.

³³ “As you have with unreasonable pride come between our sentence and our power to execute it ; that power shall be made good by rewarding thy contumacy with a sentence of banishment.” In Othello we have nearly the same language :—

“My spirit and my place have in them power
 To make this bitter to thee.”

One of the quartos reads, “make good.”

³⁴ Thus the quartos. The folio reads, disasters. By the diseases of the world are the uneasinesses, inconveniences, and slighter troubles or distresses of the world. So in King Henry VI. Part I. Act II. Sc. 5 :—

“And in that ease I'll tell thee my disease.”

The provision that Kent could make in five days might in some measure guard against such diseases of the world, but could not shield him from its disasters.

³⁵ The quartos read, “Friendship.” And in the next line, instead of “dear shelter,” “protection.”

The gods to their dear shelter take thee, maid,

[To CORDELIA.

That justly think'st, and hast most rightly said!—

And your large speeches may your deeds approve,

[To REGAN and GONERIL.

That good effects may spring from words of love.—

Thus Kent, O princes, bids you all adieu ;

He'll shape his old course in a country new. [Exit.

Re-enter GLOSTER ; with FRANCE, BURGUNDY, and Attendants.

Glo. Here's France and Burgundy, my noble lord.

Lear. My lord of Burgundy,

We first address towards you, who with this king
Hath rivall'd for our daughter : What, in the least,
Will you require in present dower with her,
Or cease your quest of love³⁶ ?

Bur.

Most royal majesty,

I crave no more than hath your highness offer'd,
Nor will you tender less.

Lear.

Right noble Burgundy,

When she was dear to us, we did hold her so ;
But now her price is fall'n : Sir, there she stands ;
If aught within that little, seeming³⁷ substance,
Or all of it, with our displeasure piec'd,
And nothing more, may fitly like your grace,
She's there, and she is yours.

Bur.

I know no answer.

Lear. Sir,

Will you, with those infirmities she owes³⁸,

³⁶ That is, your amorous pursuit. A quest is a seeking or pursuit : the expedition in which a knight was engaged is often so named in the Faerie Queene.

³⁷ Seeming here means specious. Thus in The Merry Wives of Windsor :—"Pluck the borrowed veil of modesty from the so seeming mistress Page."

³⁸ i. e. owns, is possessed of.

Unfriended, new-adopted to our hate,
Dower'd^a with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,
Take her, or leave her?

Bur. Pardon me, royal sir;
Election makes not up³⁹ on such conditions.

Lear. Then leave her, sir; for, by the pow'r that made me,

I tell you all her wealth.—For you, great king,
[To FRANCE.

I would not from your love make such a stray,
To match you where I hate; therefore beseech you
To avert your liking a more worthier way,
Than on a wretch whom nature is asham'd
Almost t'acknowledge hers.

France. This is most strange!
That she, whom^b even but now was your best object,
The argument of your praise, balm of your age,
The best, the dearest, should in this trice of time
Commit a thing so monstrous, to dismantle
So many folds of favour! Sure, her offence
Must be of such unnatural degree,
That monsters it⁴⁰, or your fore-vouch'd affection
Fall into taint⁴¹: which to believe of her,

^a The quarto has cover'd.

³⁹ That is "Election is not accomplished on such conditions," I cannot decide to take her upon such terms.

^b The quarto has that; and just below, "most best, most dearest."

⁴⁰ "Such unnatural degree

That monsters it."

In the phraseology of Shakespeare's age that and as were convertible words. So in Coriolanus:—

"But with such words that are but rooted in Your tongue."

See Julius Cæsar, Act i. Sc. 2, p. 373, note 15. The uncommon verb to monster occurs again in Coriolanus, Act ii. Sc. 2:—

"To hear my nothings monster'd."

⁴¹ i. e. Her offence must be monstrous, or the former affection which you professed for her must fall into taint; that is, become the subject of reproach. Taint is here only an abbreviation of attaint.

Must be a faith, that reason without miracle
Could never plant in me.

Cor. I yet beseech your majesty
(If for⁴² I want that glib and oily art,
To speak and purpose not ; since what I well intend,
I'll do't before I speak), that you make known
It is no vicious blot, nor other foulness,
No unchaste⁴³ action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour :
But even for want of that, for which I am richer ;
A still-soliciting eye, and such a tongue
That I am glad I have not, though not to have it,
Hath lost me in your liking.

Lear. Better thou^a Hadst not been born, than not to have pleas'd me better.

France. Is it but this ? a tardiness in nature,
Which often leaves the history unspoke,
That it intends to do ?—My lord of Burgundy,
What say you to the lady ? Love is not love,
When it is mingled with respects⁴⁴, that stand
Aloof from th'entire point. Will you have her ?
She is herself a dowry.

Bur. Royal Lear,
Give but that portion which yourself propos'd,
And here I take Cordelia by the hand,
Duchess of Burgundy.

Lear. Nothing : I have sworn ; I am firm.

Bur. I am sorry then, you have so lost a father,

⁴² i. e. If cause I want, &c.

⁴³ The quartos read, "no unclean action," and in the preceding line murther or is misprinted in the old copies for nor other.

^a Before these words the quarto has, "Go to, go to," and just after, "Is it no more but this."

⁴⁴ i. e. with cautious and prudential considerations. The folio has regards. The meaning of the passage is, that his love wants something to mark its sincerity :—

"Who seeks for aught in love but love alone."

That you must lose a husband.

Cor. Peace be with Burgundy !
 Since that respects of fortune^a are his love,
 I shall not be his wife.

France. Fairest Cordelia, that art most rich, being poor ;
 Most choice, forsaken ; and most lov'd, despis'd !
 Thee and thy virtues here I seize upon :
 Be it lawful, I take up what's cast away.
 Gods, gods ! 'tis strange, that from their cold'st neglect
 My love should kindle to inflam'd respect.—
 Thy dow'rless daughter, king, thrown to my chance,
 Is queen of us, of ours, and our fair France :
 Not all the dukes of wat'rish Burgundy
 Shall buy this unpriz'd precious maid of me.—
 Bid them farewell, Cordelia, though unkind :
 Thou lovest here, a better where⁴⁵ to find.

Lear. Thou hast her, France : let her be thine ;
 for we
 Have no such daughter, nor shall ever see
 That face of hers again :—Therefore be gone,
 Without our grace, our love, our benison.—
 Come, noble Burgundy.

[Flourish. Exeunt LEAR, BURGUNDY, CORNWALL, ALBANY, GLOSTER, and Attendants.

France. Bid farewell to your sisters.

Cor. The jewels of our father, with wash'd eyes
 Cordelia leaves you ; I know you what you are :
 And, like a sister, am most loath to call
 Your faults, as they are nam'd. Use well our father :
 To your profess'd⁴⁶ bosoms I commit him :

^a The folio has, "respect and fortune."

⁴⁵ Here and where have the power of nouns. "Thou lovest this residence, to find a better residence in another place." So in Churchyard's Farewell to the World, 1592 :—

"That growes not here, takes roote in other-where."

⁴⁶ We have here professed for professing. It has been elsewhere

But yet, alas! stood I within his grace,
I would prefer him to a better place.
So farewell to you both.

Gon. Prescribe not us our duties.

Reg.

Let your study

Be, to content your lord; who hath receiv'd you
At fortune's alms. You have obedience scanted,
And well are worth the want that you have wanted⁴⁷.

Cor. Time shall unfold what plighted⁴⁸ cunning hides;

Who cover-faults⁴⁹ at last with shame derides.
Well may you prosper!

France.

Come, my fair Cordelia.

[Exeunt FRANCE and CORDELIA.]

Gon. Sister, it is not a little I have to say, of what most nearly appertains to us both. I think, our father will hence to-night.

Reg. That's most certain, and with you; next month with us.

observed that Shakespeare often uses one participle for another. Thus in the Merchant of Venice, Act iii. Sc. 2, note 11, we have guiled for guiling; in other places delighted for delighting, &c. A remarkable instance of the converse occurs in Antony and Cleopatra; where we have all-obeying for all-obeyed. In the preceding line the folio has, "Love well our father," instead of Use.

⁴⁷ Thus the folio. The quartos read:—

"And well are worth the worth that you have wanted.

The meaning of the passage, as it now stands in the text, is, "You well deserve to want that dower, which you have lost by having failed in your obedience." So in King Henry VI. Part III. Act iv. Sc. 1:—"Though I want a kingdom;" i. e. though I am without a kingdom.

⁴⁸ That is, complicated, intricate, involved, cunning.

⁴⁹ The quartos read:—

"Who covers faults, at last shame them derides."

The folio has:—

"Who covers faults, at last with shame derides."

I have no doubt we should read cover-faults, i. e. dissemblers, and that the meaning is, Time shall unfold what cunning duplicity hides, who (Time) at last derides such dissemblers with shame, by unmasking them." Mason proposed to read:—

"Who covert faults at last with shame derides."

Gon. You see how full of changes his age is ; the observation we have made of it hath not been little : he always loved our sister most ; and with what poor judgement he hath now cast her off, appears too grossly.

Reg. 'Tis the infirmity of his age : yet he hath ever but slenderly known himself.

Gon. The best and soundest of his time hath been but rash ; then must we look to receive from his age, not alone the imperfections of long-engrafted condition⁵⁰, but therewithal, the unruly waywardness that infirm and cholerick years bring with them.

Reg. Such unconstant starts are we like to have from him, as this of Kent's banishment.

Gon. There is further compliment of leave-taking between France and him. 'Pray you, let us hit^a together : If our father carry authority with such dispositions as he bears, this last surrender of his will but offend us.

Reg. We shall further think of it.

Gon. We must do something, and i' the heat⁵¹.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A Hall in the Earl of Gloster's Castle.

Enter EDMUND, with a Letter.

Edm. Thou, nature, art my goddess¹ ; to thy law My services are bound ; Wherefore should I Stand in the plague² of custom ; and permit

⁵⁰ i. e. temper ; qualities of mind confirmed by long habit. Thus in Othello ;—

“ A woman of so gentle a condition.

^a The folio has, “ let us sit together.”

⁵¹ i. e. We must strike while the iron's hot.

¹ Edmund calls nature his goddess, for the same reason as we call a bastard a natural son : one who, according to the law of nature, is the child of his father ; but, according to those of civil society, is nullus filius.

² i. e. “ Wherefore should I submit tamely to the plague (i. e. the

The curiosity³ of nations to deprive⁴ me,
 For that I am some twelve or fourteen moonshines
 Lag of a brother? Why bastard? wherefore base?
 When my dimensions are as well compact,
 My mind as generous, and my shape as true,
 As honest madam's issue? Why brand they us
 With base? with baseness? bastardy? base, base?
 Who, in the lusty stealth of nature, take
 More composition and fierce quality,
 Than doth, within a dull, stale, tired bed,
 Go to the creating a whole tribe of fops,
 Got 'tween asleep and wake?—Well then,
 Legitimate Edgar, I must have your land:
 Our father's love is to the bastard Edmund,
 As to the legitimate: Fine word,—legitimate!
 Well, my legitimate, if this letter speed,
 And my invention thrive, Edmund the base
 Shall top the legitimate⁵. I grow; I prosper:—
 Now, gods, stand up for bastards!

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Kent banish'd thus! And France in choler parted!

And the king gone to-night! subscrib'd⁶ his power!

evil), or injustice of custom?" Shakespeare had perhaps the sense of the Latin plaga in his mind.

³ The nicety of civil institutions, their strictness and scrupulosity. See note 3, on the first scene.

⁴ To deprive is equivalent to disinherit. Exhæredo is rendered by this word in the old dictionaries: and Holinshed speaks of the line of Henry before deprived.

Hanmer observes that "Edmund inveighs against the tyranny of custom in two instances, with respect to younger brothers and to bastards. In the former he must not be understood to mean himself, but the argument becomes general by implying more than is said, Wherefore should I, or any man."

⁵ The folio, "Shall to' th' legitimate." The quarto, "Shall tooth' legitimate." The emendation is by Edwards.

⁶ To subscribe is to yield, to surrender. So in Troilus and Cressida, vol. vii. p. 254:—

Confin'd to exhibition⁷! All this done
Upon the gad⁸!—Edmund! How now? what news?

Edm. So please your lordship, none.

[Putting up the Letter.]

Glo. Why so earnestly seek you to put up that letter?

Edm. I know no news, my lord.

Glo. What paper were you reading?

Edm. Nothing, my lord.

Glo. No? What needed then that terrible despatch of it into your pocket? the quality of nothing hath not such need to hide itself. Let's see: Come, if it be nothing, I shall not need spectacles.

Edm. I beseech you, sir, pardon me: it is a letter from my brother, that I have not all o'erread; for so much as I have perused, I find it not fit for your o'er-looking.

Glo. Give me the letter, sir.

Edm. I shall offend, either to detain or give it. The contents, as in part I understand them, are to blame.

Glo. Let's see, let's see.

Edm. I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote this but as an essay⁹ or taste of my virtue.

Glo. [Reads.] “This policy and reverence of age, makes the world bitter to the best of our times; keeps our fortunes from us, till our oldness cannot relish them. I begin to find an idle and fond¹⁰ bondage in the oppression of aged tyranny; who sways, not as it

“For Hector in his blaze of wrath subscribes
To tender objects.”

⁷ Exhibition is an allowance, a stipend.

⁸ i. e. in haste, equivalent to upon the spur. A gad was a sharp pointed piece of steel, used as a spur to urge cattle forward; whence goaded forward. Mr. Nares suggests that to gad and gadding originate from being on the spur to go about.

⁹ As an essay, &c. means as a trial or taste of my virtue. “To assay, or rather essay, of the French word essayer,” says Baret; and a little lower: “To taste or assay before; pralibo.”

¹⁰ i. e. weak and foolish.

hath power, but as it is suffer'd. Come to me, that of this I may speak more. If our father would sleep till I waked him, you should enjoy half his revenue for ever, and live the beloved of your brother, Edgar." —Humph—Conspiracy!—"Sleep till I waked him—you should enjoy half his revenue,"—My son Edgar!—Had he a hand to write this? a heart and brain to breed it in?—When came this to you? Who brought it?

Edm. It was not brought me, my lord, there's the cunning of it; I found it thrown in at the casement of my closet.

Glo. You know the character to be your brother's?

Edm. If the matter were good, my lord, I durst swear it were his; but, in respect of that, I would fain think it were not.

Glo. It is his.

Edm. It is his hand, my lord; but, I hope, his heart is not in the contents.

Glo. Hath he never before¹¹ sounded you in this business?

Edm. Never, my lord: But I have often heard him maintain it to be fit, that, sons at perfect age, and fathers declining^a, the father should be as ward to the son, and the son manage his revenue.

Glo. O villain, villain!—His very opinion in the letter!—Abhorred villain! Unnatural, detested, brutish villain! worse than brutish!—Go, sirrah, seek him; I'll apprehend him:—Abominable villain!—Where is he?

Edm. I do not well know, my lord. If it shall please you to suspend your indignation against my brother, till you can derive from him better testimony of his intent, you shall run a certain course ; where¹², if you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your own honour, and shake in pieces the heart of his obedience. I dare pawn down my life for him, that he hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour¹³, and to no other pretence¹⁴ of danger.

¹¹ The quartos have heretofore.

^a The folio has declin'd.

Glo. Think you so ?

Edm. If your honour judge it meet, I will place you where you shall hear us confer of this, and by an auricular assurance have your satisfaction ; and that without any further delay than this very evening.

Glo. He cannot be such a monster.

[Edm. Nor is not, sure.

Glo. To his father, that so tenderly and entirely loves him.—Heaven and earth¹⁵ !]—Edmund, seek him out ; wind me into him¹⁶, I pray you : frame the business after your own wisdom : I would unstate myself, to be in a due resolution¹⁷.

¹² Where for whereas.

¹³ The usual address to a lord.

¹⁴ i. e. design or purpose.

¹⁵ The words between brackets are omitted in the folio.

¹⁶ Wind me into him. Another example of familiar expressive phraseology not unfrequent in Shakespeare. See vol. iii. p. 141, note 1.

¹⁷ I would unstate myself, to be in a due resolution, means, I would give all that I am possessed of, both rank and fortune, to be satisfied of the truth. So in The Four Prentices, Reed's Old Plays, vol. viii. p. 92 :—

“ Ah, but the resolution of thy death
Made me to lose such thought.”

Shakespeare frequently uses resolved for satisfied. And in the third act of Massinger's Picture, Sophia says :—

“ I have practis'd

For my certain resolution, with these courtiers.”

And in the last act she says :—

“ Nay, more, to take

For the resolution of his fears, a course

That is, by holy writ, denied a Christian.”

Edm. I will seek him, sir, presently ; convey¹⁸ the business as I shall find means, and acquaint you withal.

Glo. These late eclipses in the sun and moon portend no good to us : Though the wisdom of nature can reason it thus and thus, yet nature finds itself scourged by the sequent effects¹⁹ : love cools, friendship falls off, brothers divide : in cities, mutinies ; in countries, discord ; in palaces, treason ; and the bond cracked between son and father. [This villain of mine comes under the prediction ; there's son against father : the king falls from bias of nature ; there's father against child. We have seen the best of our time : Machinations, hollowness, treachery, and all ruinous disorders, follow us disquietly to our graves²⁰ !]—Find out this villain, Edmund, it shall lose thee nothing ; do it carefully :—And the noble and true-hearted Kent banish'd ! his offence, honesty !—Strange ! strange !

[Exit.

Edm. This is the excellent foppery of the world²¹ ! that, when we are sick in fortune (often the surfeit of our own behaviour), we make guilty of our disasters, the sun, the moon, and the stars : as if we were villains by necessity : fools, by heavenly compulsion ; knaves, thieves, and treachers²² by spherical predominance ;

¹⁸ To convey is to conduct, or carry through.

¹⁹ That is, "though natural philosophy can give account of eclipses, yet we feel their consequences."

²⁰ All between brackets is omitted in the quartos.

²¹ Warburton, in a long and ingenious note on this passage, observes that in this play the dotages of a judicial astrology are intended to be satirized. It was a very prevailing folly in the poet's time.

drunkards, liars, and adulterers, by an enforced obedience of planetary influence: and all that we are evil in, by a divine thrusting on: An admirable evasion of whoremaster man, to lay his goatish disposition to the charge of a star²³! My father compounded with my mother under the dragon's tail; and my nativity was under ursa major; so that it follows, I am rough and lecherous.—Tut, I should have been that I am, had the maidenliest star in the firmament twinkled on my bastardizing. and pat he comes, like the catastrophe of the old comedy²⁴: My cue is villainous melancholy, with a sigh like Tom o'Bedlam.—O, these eclipses do portend these divisions! *fa, sol, la, mi*²⁵.

Edg. How now, brother Edmund? What serious contemplation are you in?

²³ So Chaucer's Wife of Bath (v. 6196):—

“ I followed ay min inclination
By vertue of my constellation.”

Bernardus Sylvestris, an eminent philosopher and poet of the twelfth century, very gravely tells us in his Megacosmos, that:—

“ In stellis Codri paupertas, copia Cræsi Incestus Paridis, Hippolytique pudor.”

²⁴ Perhaps this was intended to ridicule the very awkward conclusions of our old comedies, where the persons of the scene make their entry inartificially, and just when the poet wants them on the stage.

²⁵ “ Shakespeare shows by the context that he was well acquainted with the property of these syllables in solmisation, which imply a series of sounds so unnatural that ancient musicians prohibited their use. The monkish writers on music say mi contra fa, est diabolus: the interval fa mi, including a tritonus or sharp fourth, consisting of three tones without the intervention of a semi-tone, expressed in the modern scale by the letters F G A B, would form a musical phrase extremely disagreeable to the ear. Edmund, speaking of eclipses as portents and prodigies, compares the dislocation of events, the times being out of joint, to the unnatural and offensive sounds fa so' la mi.”—Dr. Burney.

Edm. I am thinking, brother, of a prediction I read this other day, what should follow these eclipses.

Edg. Do you busy yourself with that?

Edm. I promise you²⁶, the effects he writes of, succeed unhappily: [as of unnaturalness between the child and the parent; death, dearth, dissolutions of ancient amities; divisions in state, menaces and maledictions against king and nobles; needless diffidences, banishment of friends, dissipation of cohorts²⁷, nuptial breaches, and I know not what.

Edg. How long have you been a sectary astronomical?

Edm. Come, come;] when saw you my father last?

Edg. Why, the night gone by.

Edm. Spake you with him?

Edg. Ay, two hours together.

Edm. Parted you in good terms? Found you no displeasure in him, by word or countenance?

Edg. None at all.

Edm. Bethink yourself, wherein you may have offended him: and at my entreaty, forbear his presence, till some little time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure; which at this instant so rageth in him, that with the mischief of your person it would scarcely allay.

Edg. Some villain hath done me wrong.

Edm. That's my fear. I pray you, have a con-

²⁶ "The folio edition commonly differs from the first quarto, by augmentations or insertions, but in this place it varies by the omission of all between brackets. It is easy to remark that in this speech, which ought, I think, to be inserted as it now is in the text, Edmund, with the common craft of fortunetellers, mingles the past and the future, and tells of the future only what he already foreknows by confederacy, or can attain by probable conjecture."—Johnson.

²⁷ For cohorts some editors read courts. A reading approved by Johnson.

Edg. Arm'd, brother ?

Edm. Brother, I advise you to the best : I am no honest man, if there be any good meaning towards you : I have told you what I have seen and heard, but faintly ; nothing like the image and horror of it : 'Pray you, away.

Edg. Shall I hear from you anon ?

Edm. I do serve you in this business.—

[Exit EDGAR.]

A credulous father, and a brother noble,
Whose nature is so far from doing harms,
That he suspects none ; on whose foolish honesty
My practices ride easy !—I see the business.—
Let me, if not by birth, have lands by wit :
All with me's meet, that I can fashion fit. [Exit.]

SCENE III. A Room in the Duke of Albany's Palace.

Enter GONERIL and Steward.

Gon. Did my father strike my gentleman for chiding of his fool ?

Stew. Ay, madam.

Gon. By day and night he wrongs me ; every hour He flashes into one gross crime or other, That sets us all at odds : I'll not endure it : His knights grow riotous, and himself upbraids us On every trifle ;—When he returns from hunting, I will not speak with him : say, I am sick :—

²⁸ Continent, i. e. temperate.

If you come slack of former services,
You shall do well ; the fault of it I'll answer.

Stew. He's coming, madam ; I hear him.

[Horns within.

Gon. Put on what weary negligence you please,
You and your fellows ; I'd have it come to question :
If he distaste¹ it, let him to my sister,
Whose mind and mine, I know, in that are one,
[Not to be over-rul'd. Idle old man²,
That still would manage those authorities,
That he hath given away !—Now, by my life,
Old fools are babes again ; and must be us'd
With checks, as flatteries,—when they are seen abus'd³.]

Remember what I have said.

Stew.

Well, madam.

Gon. And let his knights have colder looks among you ;

What grows of it, no matter ; advise your fellows so :
[I would breed from hence occasions, and I shall,
That I may speak⁴ :]—I'll write straight to my sister,
To hold my course :—Prepare for dinner. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. A Hall in the same.

Enter KENT, disguised.

Kent. If but as well I other accents borrow,
That can my speech diffuse¹, my good intent

² This line and the four following are not in the folio. Theobald observes that they are fine in themselves, and much in character for Goneril.

³ I take the meaning of this passage to be "Old men are babes again, and must be accustomed to checks as well as flatteries, especially when the latter are seen to be abused by them."

⁴ The words in brackets are found in the quartos, but omitted in the folio.

¹ To diffuse here means to disguise, to render it strange, to ob-

 For which I raz'd² my likeness. -- Now, banish'd
 Kent,

If thou canst serve where thou dost stand condemn'd,
 So may it come, thy master³, whom thou lov'st,
 Shall find thee full of labours.

Horns within. Enter LEAR, Knights, and Attendants.

Lear. Let me not stay a jot for dinner: go, get it ready. [Exit an Attendant.] How now, what art thou?

Kent. A man, sir.

Lear. What dost thou profess? What would'st thou with us?

Kent. I do profess to be no less than I seem; to serve him truly that will put me in trust; to love him that is honest; to converse⁴ with him that is wise, and says little; to fear judgement; to fight when I cannot choose: and to eat no fish⁵.

scure it. See vol. v. p. 408, note 5, and Merry Wives of Windsor, p. 273, note 6. We must suppose that Kent advances looking on his disguise. This circumstance very naturally leads to his speech, which otherwise would have no apparent introduction.

² Raz'd, i. e. effaced.

³ We must understand, "So may it come, that thy master," &c.

⁴ To converse signifies immediately and properly to keep company, to have commerce with. His meaning is, "that he chooses for his companions men of reserve and caution; men who are not tattlers nor talebearers."

⁵ It is not clear how Kent means to make the eating no fish a recommendatory quality, unless we suppose that it arose from the odium then cast upon the papists, who were the most strict observers of periodical fasts, which though enjoined to the people under the protestant government of Elizabeth, were not very palatable or strictly observed by the commonalty. Marston's Dutch Courtezan says, "I trust I am none of the wicked that eat fish a Fridays." I cannot think with Mr. Blakeway, who says that Kent means to insinuate that he never desires to partake of fish because Lear. What art thou?

Kent. A very honest-hearted fellow, and as poor as the king.

Lear. If thou be as poor for a subject, as he is for a king, thou art poor enough. What would'st thou?

Kent. Service.

Lear. Who would'st thou serve?

Kent. You.

Lear. Dost thou know me, fellow?

Kent. No, sir; but you have that in your countenance, which I would fain call master.

Lear. What's that?

Kent. Authority.

Lear. What services canst thou do?

Kent. I can keep honest counsel, ride, run, mar a curious tale in telling it, and deliver a plain message bluntly: that which ordinary men are fit for, I am qualified in; and the best of me is diligence.

Lear. How old art thou?

Kent. Not so young, sir, to love a woman for singing; nor so old, to dote on her for any thing: I have years on my back forty-eight.

Lear. Follow me; thou shalt serve me, if I like thee no worse after dinner; I will not part from thee yet.—Dinner, ho, dinner;—Where's my knave? my fool? Go you, and call my fool hither:

Enter Steward.

You, you, sirrah, where's my daughter?

it was esteemed a luxury! and therefore incompatible with his situation as an humble and discreet dependant. The repeated promulgation of mandates from the court for the better observance of fish days disproves this. I have before me a Letter of Archbishop Whitgift, in 1596, strictly enjoining the clergy of his diocess to attend to the observance of the fasts and fish days among their respective parishioners, and severely animadverting upon the refractory spirit which disposed them to eat flesh out of due season contrary to law.

Stew. So please you,— [Exit.

Lear. What says the fellow there? Call the clot-poll back.—Where's my fool, ho?—I think the world's asleep.—How now? where's that mongrel?

Knight. He says, my lord, your daughter is not well.

Lear. Why came not the slave back to me when I call'd him?

Knight. Sir, he answer'd me in the roundest manner, he would not.

Lear. He would not!

Knight. My lord, I know not what the matter is; but, to my judgement, your highness is not entertain'd with that ceremonious affection as you were wont; there's a great abatement of kindness appears, as well in the general dependants, as in the duke himself also, and your daughter.

Lear. Ha! say'st thou so?

Knight. I beseech you, pardon me, my lord, if I be mistaken; for my duty cannot be silent, when I think your highness is wrong'd.

Lear. Thou but remember'st me of mine own conception; I have perceived a most faint neglect of late; which I have rather blamed as mine own jealous curiosity⁶, than as a very pretence⁷ and purpose of unkindness: I will look further into't.—But where's my fool? I have not seen him this two days.

Knight. Since my young lady's going into France, sir, the fool hath much pined away⁸.

⁶ By jealous curiosity Lear appears to mean a punctilious jealousy resulting from a scrupulous watchfulness of his own dignity. See the third note on the first scene of this play.

⁷ A very pretence is an absolute design. So in a former scene, "to no other pretence of danger."

⁸ "This is an endearing circumstance in the Fool's character, and creates such an interest in his favour as his wit alone might have failed to procure for him."—Stevens.

Lear. No more of that ; I have noted it well.—
Go you, and tell my daughter I would speak with her.—Go you, call hither my fool.

Re-enter Steward.

O, you sir, you sir, come you hither : Who am I, sir ?

Stew. My lady's father.

Lear. My lady's father ! my lord's knave : you whoreson dog ! you slave ! you cur !

Stew. I am none of this, my lord ; I beseech you, pardon me.

Lear. Do you bandy⁹ looks with me, you rascal ?
[Striking him.

Stew. I'll not be struck, my lord.

Kent. Nor tripp'd neither ; you base foot-ball player. [Tripping up his Heels.

Lear. I thank thee, fellow ; thou servest me, and I'll love thee.

Kent. Come, sir, arise, away ; I'll teach you differences : away, away : If you will measure your lub-ber's length again, tarry : but away : go to : Have you wisdom ? so. [Pushes the Steward out.

Lear. Now, my friendly knave, I thank thee :
there's earnest of thy service. [Giving KENT Money.

Enter Fool.

Fool. Let me hire him too ;—Here's my coxcomb.
[Giving KENT his Cap.

Lear. How now, my pretty knave ? how dost thou ?

Fool. Sirrah, you were best take my coxcomb.

Kent. Why, fool¹⁰ ?

⁹ A metaphor from tennis. "Come in and take this bandy with the racket of patience."—Decker's Satiromastix. "To bandy a ball" Cole defines clava pilam torquere ; "To bandy at tennis," reticulo pellere. "To bandy blows" is still a common idiom.

¹⁰ The folio gives this speech to Lear ; and prints, "Why, my boy ?"

Fool. Why? For taking one's part that's out of favour: Nay, an thou canst not smile as the wind sits, thou'lt catch cold shortly¹¹. There, take my coxcomb: Why, this fellow has banish'd two of his daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will: if thou follow him, thou must needs wear my coxcomb¹².—How now, nuncle¹³? 'Would, I had two coxcombs, and two daughters!

Lear. Why, my boy?

Fool. If I gave them all my living¹⁴, I'd keep my coxcombs myself: There's mine; beg another of thy daughters.

Lear. Take heed, sirrah; the whip.

Fool. Truth's a dog that must to kennel: he must be whipp'd out, when lady, the brach¹⁵, may stand by the fire, and stink.

Lear. A pestilent gall to me!

¹¹ i. e. be turned out of doors and exposed to the inclemency of the weather.

¹² The reader may see a representation of this ornament of the fool's cap in Mr. Douce's Illustrations of Shakespeare, vol. ii. "Natural ideots and fools have, and still do accustome themselves to weare in their cappes cockes feathers, or a hat with a necke and heade of a cocke on the top, and a bell thereon."—Minshew's Dictionary, 1617.

¹³ A familiar contraction of mine uncle, as ningle, &c. It seems that the customary appellation of the old licensed fool to his superiors was uncle. In Beaumont and Fletcher's Pilgrim, when Alinda assumes the character of a fool, she uses the same language. She meets Alphonso, and calls him nuncle; to which he replies by calling her naunt. In the same style it appears the fools called each other cousin. Mon oncle was long a term of respect and familiar endearment in France, as well as ma tante. They have a proverb, "Il est bien mon oncle, qui le ventre me comble." It is remarkable, observes Mr. Vaillant, that the lower people in Shropshire call the judge of assize "my nuncle the judge."

¹⁴ i. e. all my estate or property.

¹⁵ It has already been shown that brach was a mannerly name for a bitch. See vol. iii. p. 120, note 7. So Hotspur, in The Second Part of King Henry IV. says:—"I would rather hear lady my brach howl in Irish."

Fool. Sirrah, I'll teach thee a speech.

Lear. Do.

Fool. Mark it, nuncle :—

Have more than thou showest,
 Speak less than thou knowest,
 Lend less than thou owest¹⁶,
 Ride more than thou goest,
 Learn more than thou trowest¹⁷,
 Set less than thou throwest,
 Leave thy drink and thy whore,
 And keep in-a-door,
 And thou shalt have more
 Than two tens to a score.

Kent This is nothing, fool¹⁸.

Fool. Then 'tis like the breath of an unfee'd lawyer; you gave me nothing for't; Can you make no use of nothing, nuncle ?

Lear. Why, no, boy; nothing can be made out of nothing.

Fool. 'Pr'ythee, tell him, so much the rent of his land comes to; he will not believe a fool.

[To KENT.

Lear. A bitter fool !

Fool. Dost thou know the difference, my boy, between a bitter fool and a sweet fool ?

Lear. [No, lad; teach me.

Fool. That lord, that counsel'd thee
 To give away thy land,
 Come place him here by me,—
 Do thou for him stand :
 The sweet and bitter fool

¹⁶ That is, "do not lend all that thou hast." To owe in ancient language is to possess.

¹⁷ To trow is to believe. The precept is admirable. Set in the next line means stake.

¹⁸ In the quartos this speech is assigned to Lear.

Will presently appear ;
 The one in motley here,
 The other found out there.

Lear. Dost thou call me fool, boy ?

Fool. All thy other titles thou hast given away ; that thou wast born with.

Kent. This is not altogether fool, my lord.

Fool. No, 'faith, lords and great men will not let me ; if I had a monopoly out, they would have part on't : and ladies¹⁹ too, they will not let me have all fool to myself ; they'll be snatching.]—Give me an egg, nuncle, and I'll give thee two crowns.

Lear. What two crowns shall they be ?

Fool. Why, after I have cut the egg i' the middle, and eat up the meat, the two crowns of the egg. When thou clovest thy crown i' the middle, and gav'st away both parts, thou bor'st thine ass on thy back o'er the dirt : Thou had'st little wit in thy bald crown, when thou gav'st thy golden one away. If I speak like myself in this, let him be whipp'd that first finds it so.

*Fools had ne'er less grace in a year*²⁰ ; [Singing.

For wise men are grown foppish ;

And know not how their wits to wear,

Their manners are so apish.

¹⁹ The quartos erroneously print lodes for ladies. The fool evidently refers to Lear's daughters. The passage in brackets is omitted in the folio, perhaps for political reasons, as it seemed to censure the monopolies, the gross abuses of which, and the corruption and avarice of the courtiers, who went shares with the patentee, were objects of satire more legitimate than safe.

²⁰ i. e. "There never was a time when fools were less in favour ; and the reason is, that they were never so little wanted, for wise men now supply their place." In Mother Bombie, a Comedy, by Lyly, 1594, we find "I think gentlemen had never less wit in a year." It is remarkable that the quartos read "less wit," instead of "less grace," which is the reading of the folio.

Lear. When were you wont to be so full of songs, sirrah?

Fool. I have used it, nuncle, ever since thou mad'st thy daughters thy mother: for when thou gavest them the rod, and put'st down thine own breeches,

Then they for sudden joy did weep, [Singing.

And I for sorrow sung,

That such a king should play bo-peep,

*And go the fools among*²¹.

Pr'ythee, nuncle, keep a schoolmaster that can teach thy fool to lie; I would fain learn to lie.

Lear. An you lie, sirrah, we'll have you whipp'd.

Fool. I marvel, what kin thou and thy daughters are: they'll have me whipp'd for speaking true, thou'lt have me whipp'd for lying; and, sometimes, I am whipp'd for holding my peace. I had rather be any kind of thing, than a fool: and yet I would not be thee, nuncle; thou hast pared thy wit o'both sides, and left nothing in the middle: Here comes one o'the parings.

Enter GONERIL.

Lear. How now, daughter! what makes that frontlet²² on?

Methinks you are too much of late i' the frown.

²¹ So in the Rape of Lucrece, by Heywood, 1608:—

“When Tarquin first in court began,

And was approved king,

Some men for sodden joy gan weep,

And I for sorrow sing.”

²² A frontlet, or forehead cloth, was worn by ladies of old to prevent wrinkles. So in George Chapman's Hero and Leander, ad finem:—

“E'en like the forehead cloth that in the night,

Or when they sorrow ladies us'd to wear.”

Thus also in Zepheria, a collection of Sonnets, 4to. 1594:—

“But now, my sunne, it fits thou take thy set

And vayne thy face with frownes as with a frontlet.”

And in Lyly's Euphues and his England, 1580:—“The next day

Fool. Thou wast a pretty fellow, when thou had'st no need to care for her frowning; now thou art an O without a figure: I am better than thou art now; I am a fool, thou art nothing.—Yes, forsooth, I will hold my tongue! so your face [To GON.] bids me, though you say nothing. Mum, mum,

He that keeps nor crust nor crum,

Weary of all, shall want some.

That's a sheal'd peascod²³. [Pointing to LEAR.]

Gon. Not only, sir, this your all-licens'd fool,
But other of your insolent retinue
Do hourly carp and quarrel; breaking forth
In rank and not-to-be-endured riots. Sir,
I had thought, by making this well known unto you,
To have found a safe redress; but now grow fearful,
By what yourself too late have spoke and done,
That you protect this course, and put it on²⁴
By your allowance; which if you should, the fault
Would not 'scape censure, nor the redresses sleep;
Which in the tender of a wholesome weal,
Might in their working do you that offence,
Which else were shame, that then necessity
Will call discreet proceeding.

Fool. For you trow, nuncle,

The hedge sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,

That it had its head bit off by its young.

So, out went the candle, and we were left darkling²⁵.

coming to the gallery where she was solitary, walking, with her frowning cloth, as sicke lately of the sullens," &c.

²³ Now a mere husk that contains nothing. The robing of Richard II.'s effigy in Westminster Abbey is wrought with peascods open, and the peas out; perhaps an allusion to his being once in full possession of sovereignty, but soon reduced to an empty title. See Camden's Remaines, 1674, p. 453, edit. 1657, p. 340.

²⁴ Put it on, that is promote it, push it forward. Allowance is approbation.

²⁵ "Shakespeare's fools are certainly copied from the life. The originals he copied were no doubt men of quick parts; lively

Lear. Are you our daughter?

Gon.

Come, sir,

I would you would make use of that good wisdom,
Whereof I know you are fraught, and put away
These dispositions, which of late transform you
From what you rightly are²⁶.

Fool. May not an ass know when the cart draws the horse? Whoop, Jug! I love thee.

Lear. Does any here know me?—Why, this is not Lear: does Lear walk thus? speak thus? Where are his eyes? Either his notion weakens, or his discern-ings are lethargied.—Sleeping or waking?—Ha!
sure 'tis not so.—Who is it that can tell me who I am²⁷?

and sarcastick. Though they were licensed to say any thing, it was still necessary, to prevent giving offence, that every thing they said should have a playful air: we may suppose therefore that they had a custom of taking off the edge of too sharp a speech by covering it hastily with the end of an old song, or any glib nonsense that came into their mind. I know no other way of accounting for the incoherent words with which Shakespeare often finishes this fool's speeches."—Sir Joshua Reynolds. In a very old drama, entitled The Longer thou Livest the more Foole thou art, printed about 1580, we find the following stage direction:—"Entreth Moros, counterfainting a vaine gesture and a foolish countenance, singing the foote of many songs, as fools were wont."

²⁶ In the quarto this speech is printed as prose. The folio omits, "Come, sir."

²⁷ This passage has been erroneously printed in some late editions, "Who is it can tell me who I am?" says Lear. In the folio the reply, "Lear's shadow," is rightly given to the Fool, but the latter part of the speech of Lear is omitted in that copy. Lear heeds not what the Fool replies to his question, but continues:—"Were I to judge from the marks of sovereignty, of knowledge, or of reason, I should be induced to think I had daughters, yet that must be a false persuasion;—it cannot be.—" The Fool seizes the pause in Lear's speech to continue his interrupted reply to Lear's question: he had before said, "You are Lear's shadow;" he now adds, "which they (i. e. your daughters) will make an obedient father." Lear heeds him not in his emotion, but addresses Goneril with "Your name, fair gentlewoman." It is remarkable that the continuation of Lear's speech, and the

Fool. Lear's shadow,—

Lear. [I would learn that ; for by the marks of sovereignty, knowledge, and reason, I should be false persuaded I had daughters.

Fool. —Which they will make an obedient father.]

Lear. Your name, fair gentlewoman ?

Gon. This admiration, sir, is much o' the savour²⁸
Of other your new pranks. I do beseech you
To understand my purposes aright :
As you are old and reverend, you should be wise :
Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires ;
Men so disorder'd, so debosh'd²⁹, and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shows like a riotous inn : epicurism and lust
Make it more like a tavern or a brothel,
Than a grac'd palace. The shame itself doth speak
For instant remedy : Be then desir'd
By her, that else will take the thing she begs,
A little to disquantity your train :
And the remainder, that shall still depend³⁰
To be such men as may besort your age,
And know themselves and you.

Lear. Darkness and devils !—
Saddle my horses ; call my train together.—
Degenerate bastard ! I'll not trouble thee ;
Yet have I left a daughter.

Gon. You strike my people ; and your disorder'd rabble

continuation of the Fool's comment, is omitted in the folio copy, which by other omissions prints the first part as verse, for which it does not seem to be intended.

²⁸ The old copies have distinctly savour, which has been unnecessarily changed to favour. Thus in King Henry V. Act i. Sc. 1 :— “ You savour too much of your youth.”

²⁹ Debosh'd. See Tempest, Act iii. Sc. 2, note 1.

³⁰ i. e. continue in service. So in Measure for Measure :—

“ Canst thou believe thy living is a life,
So stinkingly depending.”

Make servants of their betters.

Enter ALBANY.

Lear. Woe, that too late repents³¹,—O, sir, are you come?

Is it your will? [To ALB.] Speak, sir.—Prepare my horses.

Ingratitude! thou marble-hearted fiend,
More hideous, when thou show'st thee in a child,
Than the sea-monster³²!

Alb. 'Pray, sir, be patient.

Lear. Detested kite! thou liest: [To GONERIL.
My train are men of choice and rarest parts,
That all particulars of duty know:
And in the most exact regard support
The worships of their name.—O most small fault,
How ugly didst thou in Cordelia show!
Which, like an engine³³, wrench'd my frame of nature
From the fix'd place; drew from my heart all love,
And added to the gall. O Lear, Lear, Lear!
Beat at this gate that let thy folly in.

[Striking his Head.

And thy dear judgement out.—Go, go,—my people!

Alb. My lord, I am guiltless, as I am ignorant

³¹ One of the quarto copies reads, "We that too late repents us." The others, "We that too late repents." The words, "O, sir, are you come?" are not in the folio. This may have been suggested by The Mirroure for Magistrates:—

"They call him doting foole, all his requests debarr'd,
Demanding if with life he were not well content:
Then he too late his rigour did repent
Gainst me."
Story of Queen Cordelia.

³² The sea monster is the hippopotamus, the hieroglyphical symbol of impiety and ingratitude. Sandys, in his Travels, says "that he killeth his sire and ravisheth his own dam."

³³ By an engine the rack is here intended. So in The Night Walker, by Beaumont and Fletcher:—

"Their souls shot through with adders, torn on engines."

Of what hath mov'd you.

Lear. It may be so, my lord.—
 Hear, nature, hear; dear goddess, hear!
 Suspend thy purpose, if thou didst intend
 To make this creature fruitful!
 Into her womb convey sterility!
 Dry up in her the organs of increase;
 And from her derogate³⁴ body never spring
 A babe to honour her! If she must teem,
 Create her child of spleen; that it may live,
 And be a thwart³⁵ disnatur'd torment to her!
 Let it stamp wrinkles in her brow of youth;
 With cadent tears fret channels in her cheeks:
 Turn all her mother's pains, and benefits³⁶,
 To laughter and contempt; that she may feel
 How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is³⁷
 To have a thankless child!—Away, away! [Exit.]

Alb. Now, gods, that we adore, whereof comes this?

Gon. Never afflict yourself to know the cause³⁸;
 But let his disposition have that scope
 That dotage gives it.

Re-enter LEAR.

Lear. What, fifty of my followers, at a clap!
 Within a fortnight?

Alb. What's the matter, sir?

³⁴ Derogate here means degenerate, degraded.

³⁵ Thwart as a noun adjective is not frequent in our language. It is to be found, however, in Promos and Cassandra, 1578:—

“Sith fortune thwart doth crosse my joys with care.”

Disnatur'd is wanting natural affection. So Daniel, in Hymen's Triumph, 1623:—“I am not so disnatur'd a man.”

³⁶ “Pains and benefits,” in this place, signify maternal cares and good offices.

³⁷ So in Psalm cxi. 3:—“They have sharpened their tongues like a serpent; adder's poison is under their lips.” The viper was the emblem of ingratitude.

³⁸ The folio reads, “to know more of it.”

Lear. I'll tell thee ;—Life and death ! I am asham'd

That thou hast power to shake my manhood thus :

[To GONERIL.

That these hot tears, which break from me perforce,
Should make thee worth them.—Blasts and fogs upon thee !

The untented³⁹ woundings of a father's curse
Pierce every sense about thee !—Old fond eyes,
Bewep this cause again, I'll pluck you out ;
And cast you, with the waters that you lose,
To temper clay.—

Ha ! let it be so⁴⁰ :—I have another daughter,
Who, I am sure, is kind and comfortable ;
When she shall hear this of thee, with her nails
She'll flay thy wolfish visage. Thou shalt find,
That I'll resume the shape which thou dost think
I have cast off for ever⁴¹.

[Exeunt LEAR, KENT, and Attendants

Gon. Do you mark that ?

Alb. I cannot be so partial, Goneril,
To the great love I bear you,—

Gon. 'Pray you, content.—What, Oswald, ho !
You, sir, more knave than fool, after your master.

[To the Fool.

Fool. Nuncle Lear, nuncle Lear, tarry, and take the fool with thee.

³⁹ The untented woundings are the rankling or never healing wounds inflicted by a parental malediction. Tents are well known dressings inserted into wounds as a preparative to healing them. Shakespeare quibbles upon this surgical practice in Troilus and Cressida :—

Patr. Who keeps the tent now ?

Ther. The surgeon's box, or the patient's wound."

⁴⁰ The words, "is it come to this?" are here added in the quarto.

⁴¹ The words, "thou shalt, I warrant thee," are here added in the quarto.

A fox, when one has caught her,
 And such a daughter,
 Should sure to the slaughter,
 If my cap would buy a halter ;
 So the fool follows after.

[Exit.

*Gon.*⁴² [This man hath had good counsel :—A hundred knights !

'Tis politick, and safe, to let him keep
 At point⁴³ a hundred knights. Yes, that on every dream,

Each buz, each fancy, each complaint, dislike,
 He may enguard his dotage with their pow'rs,
 And hold our lives in mercy.] Oswald, I say !—

Alb. Well, you may fear too far.

Gon. Safer than trust too far :

Let me still take away the harms I fear,
 Not fear still to be harm'd⁴⁴. I know his heart :
 What he hath utter'd, I have writ my sister ;
 If she sustain him and his hundred knights,
 When I have show'd the unfitness.—

Enter Steward.

How now, Oswald ?

What, have you writ that letter to my sister ?

Stew. Ay, madam.

Gon. Take you some company, and away to horse :
 Inform her full of my particular fear ;
 And thereto add such reasons of your own,
 As may compact it more. Get you gone ;
 And hasten your return. [Exit Stew.] No, no, my lord,

⁴² All within brackets is omitted in the quartos.

⁴³ At point. See Macbeth, Act iv. Sc. 3, note ^a, p. 93.

⁴⁴ The old copies have, "Nor fear still to be taken." But it is evident that the context requires harm'd. The compositor's eye glancing on the preceding line, he has put taken for the proper word.

This milky gentleness, and course of yours,
 Though I condemn not, yet, under pardon,
 You are much more attask'd⁴⁵ for want of wisdom,
 Than prais'd for harmful mildness.

Alb. How far your eyes may pierce, I cannot tell ;
 Striving to better, oft we mar what's well.

Gon. Nay, then—

Alb. Well, well ; the event. [Exeunt.

SCENE V. Court before the same.

Enter LEAR, KENT, and Fool.

Lear. Go you before to Gloster with these letters:
 acquaint my daughter no further with any thing you know, than comes from her demand out of the letter :
 If your diligence be not speedy, I shall be there before you¹.

Kent. I will not sleep, my lord, till I have de-
 'ivered your letter. [Exit.

Fool. If a man's brains were in his hœels, were't not in danger of kibes ?

Lear. Ay, boy.

⁴⁵ The folio reads at task, one of the quartos attask'd, the others have alapt, which occurs in the Sixe-folde Politician, attributed to Milton's father. The work task is frequently used by Shakespeare and his contemporaries in the sense of tax. Goneril means to say, that he was more taxed for want of wisdom, than praised for mildness. So in The Island Princess of Beaumont and Fletcher, Quisana says to Ruy Dias :—

“ You are too saucy, too impudent,
 To task me with these errors.”

¹ The word there in this speech shows that when the king says, “ Go you before to Gloster,” he means the town of Gloster, which Shakespeare chose to make the residence of the Duke of Cornwall, to increase the probability of their setting out late from thence on a visit to the Earl of Gloster. Our old English earls usually resided in the counties from whence they took their titles. Lear, not finding his son-in-law and his wife at home, follows them to the Earl of Gloster's castle.

Fool. Then, I pr'ythee, be merry ; thy wit shall not go slip-shod^a.

Lear. Ha, ha, ha !

Fool. Shalt see, thy other daughter will use thee kindly² ; for though she's as like this as a crab's like an apple, yet I can tell what I can tell.

Lear. Why, what canst thou tell, my boy ?

Fool. She will taste as like this, as a crab does to a crab. Thou canst not³ tell, why one's nose stands in the middle of his face ?

Lear. No.

Fool. Why, to keep his eyes on either side his nose ; that what a man cannot smell out, he may spy into.

Lear. I did her wrong⁴ :—

Fool. Can'st tell how an oyster makes his shell ?

Lear. No.

Fool. Nor I neither ; but I can tell why a snail has a house.

Lear. Why ?

Fool. Why, to put his head in ; not to give it away to his daughters, and leave his horns without a case.

Lear. I will forget my nature.—So kind a father ! —Be my horses ready ?

Fool. Thy asses are gone about 'em. The reason why the seven stars are no more than seven, is a pretty reason.

Lear. Because they are not eight ?

^a i. e. “ For you show you have no wit in undertaking your present journey.”

² The Fool quibbles, using the word kindly in two senses ; as it means affectionately, and like the rest of her kind, or after their nature.

³ The folios have, “ Thou canst tell why ones nose stands i' th' middle on's face ? ” “ No,” — “ Why to keep ones eyes of either side's nose.”

⁴ He is musing on Cordelia.

Fool. Yes, indeed: Thou would'st make a good fool.

Lear. To take't again perforce⁵!—Monster ingratitude!

Fool. If thou wert my fool, nuncle, I'd have thee beaten for being old before thy time.

Lear. How's that?

Fool. Thou should'st not have been old, before thou hadst been wise.

Lear. O let me not be mad, not mad, sweet heaven! Keep me in temper; I would not be mad!—

Enter Gentleman.

How now! Are the horses ready?

Gent. Ready, my lord.

Lear. Come, boy.

Fool. She that is maid now, and laughs at my departure,
Shall not be a maid long, unless things be cut shorter⁶.
[Exeunt.]

⁵ The subject of Lear's meditation is the resumption of that moiety of the kingdom he had bestowed on Goneril. This was what Albany apprehended, when he replied to the upbraidings of his wife:—"Well, well; the event." What Lear himself projected when he left Goneril to go to Regan:—

"Thou shalt find

That I'll resume the shape, which thou dost think

I have cast off for ever."

And what Curan afterwards refers to, when he asks Edmund:—"Have you heard of no likely wars toward, 'twixt the Dukes of Cornwall and Albany?"

⁶ i. e. "She who thinks that the journey we are now starting on will better us and bring us mirth, is such a simpleton, that if she is a maid now, she will be cheated before long of her claim to the title."

ACT II.

SCENE I. A Court within the Castle of the Earl of Gloster.

Enter EDMUND and CURAN, meeting.

Edmund.

SAVE thee, Curan.

Cur. And you, sir. I have been with your father; and given him notice, that the Duke of Cornwall, and Regan his duchess, will be here with him to-night.

Edm. How comes that?

Cur. Nay, I know not: You have heard of the news abroad; I mean, the whisper'd ones, for they are yet but ear-kissing arguments¹?

Edm. Not I; 'Pray you, what are they?

Cur. Have you heard of no likely wars toward², 'twixt the Dukes of Cornwall and Albany?

Edm. Not a word.

Cur. You may do, then, in time. Fare you well, sir. [Exit.

Edm. The duke be here to-night? The better! Best! This weaves itself perforce into my business! My father hath set guard to take my brother; And I have one thing, of a queasy³ question,

¹ Ear-kissing arguments means that they are yet in reality only whispered ones.

² This and the following speech are omitted in the quarto B.

³ Queasy appears to mean here delicate, unsettled. So Ben Jonson, in Sejanus:—

“These times are rather queasy to be touched.—

Have you not seen or read part of his book?”

Queasy is still in use to express that sickishness of stomach which the slightest disgust is apt to provoke.

Which I must act:—Briefness, and fortune, work!—
 Brother, a word; descend:—Brother, I say;

Enter EDGAR.

My father watches:—O sir, fly this place;
 Intelligence is given where you are hid;
 You have now the good advantage of the night:—
 Have you not spoken 'gainst the duke of Cornwall?
 He's coming hither; now, i' the night, i' the haste,
 And Regan with him; Have you nothing said
 Upon his party 'gainst the duke of Albany?⁴
 Advise⁵ yourself.

Edg. I am sure on't, not a word.

Edm. I hear my father coming,—pardon me:—
 In cunning, I must draw my sword upon you:—
 Draw: Seem to defend yourself: Now quit you well.
 Yield:—come before my father;—Light, ho, here!—
 Fly, brother;—Torches! torches!—So, farewell.—
 [Exit EDGAR.]

Some blood drawn on me would beget opinion [Wounds his Arm.
 Of my more fierce endeavour: I have seen drunkards
 Do more than this in sport⁶.—Father! Father!
 Stop, stop! No help?

Enter GLOSTER, and Servants with Torches.

Glo. Now, Edmund, where's the villain?

Edm. Here stood he in the dark, his sharp sword out,
 Mumbling of wicked charms, conjuring the moon

⁴ i. e. "Have you said nothing upon the party formed by him against the Duke of Albany?"

⁵ i. e. consider, recollect yourself.

⁶ These drunken feats are mentioned in Marston's Dutch Courtezan:—"Have I not been drunk for your health, eat glasses, drunk wine, stabbed arms, and done all offices of protested gallantry for your sake?"

To stand his auspicious mistress ⁷:—

Glo. But where is he ?

Edm. Look, sir, I bleed.

Glo. Where is the villain, Edmund ?

Edm. Fled this way, sir. When by no means he could—

Glo. Pursue him, ho!—Go after.—[Exit Serv.] By no means,—what ?

Edm. Persuade me to the murder of your lordship; But that I told him, the revenging gods 'Gainst parricides did all their thunders bend ⁸; Spoke, with how manifold and strong a bond The child was bound to the father;—Sir, in fine, Seeing how loathly opposite I stood To his unnatural purpose, in fell motion, With his prepared sword, he charges home My unprovided body, lanc'd⁹ mine arm : But when he saw my best alarum'd spirits, Bold in the quarrel's right, rous'd to the encounter, Or whether gasted¹⁰ by the noise I made, Full suddenly he fled.

Glo. Let him fly far :

Not in this land shall he remain uncaught,
And found—despatch. The noble duke my master,
My worthy arch¹² and patron, comes to-night :

⁷ This was a proper circumstance to urge to Gloster; who appears to have been very superstitious with regard to this matter, if we may judge by what passes between him and his son in a foregoing scene.

⁸ Thus the first quarto; the folio has "the thunder."

⁹ The folio latch'd, the quarto launch'd, evidently for launced. The same orthography is used by Spenser and Dryden.

¹⁰ Gasted, that is, aghasted, frighted. Thus in Beaumont and Fletcher's Wit at Several Weapons:—"Either the sight of the lady has gasted him, or else he's drunk."

¹² i. e. chief; a word now only used in composition, as arch-angel, arch-duke, &c. So in Heywood's If You Know Not Me, You Know Nobody:—"Poole, that arch of truth and honesty."

By his authority I will proclaim it,
That he which finds him, shall deserve our thanks,
Bringing the murderous coward to the stake ;
He that conceals him, death.

Edm. When I dissuaded him from his intent,
And found him pight to do it, with curst speech¹³ ;
I threaten'd to discover him : He replied,
" Thou unpossessing bastard ! dost thou think,
If I would stand against thee, would the reposal¹⁴
Of any trust, virtue, or worth in thee
Make thy words faith'd ! No : what I should deny,
(As this I would ; ay, though thou didst produce
My very character¹⁵), I'd turn it all
To thy suggestion, plot, and damned practice :
And thou must make a dullard of the world,
If they not thought the profits of my death
Were very pregnant and potential spurs¹⁶
To make thee seek it."

Glo. Strong and fasten'd villain ;
Would he deny his letter ?—I never got him¹⁷.

[Trumpets within.

¹³ " And found him pight to do it, with curst speech."
Pight is pitched, fixed, settled; curst is vehemently angry, bitter.

" Therefore my heart is surely pight
Of her alone to have a sight."

Lusty Juventus, 1561.

" He did with a very curste taunte, checke, and rebuke the feloe."—Erasmus's Apophthegmes, by N. Udal, fo. 47.

¹⁴ i. e. Would any opinion that men have reposed in thy trust, virtue, &c. The old quarto reads, "could the reposeure."

¹⁵ i. e. My hand-writing, my signature. See Merry Wives of Windsor, Act v. Sc. 5, note 9.

¹⁶ The folio reads, "potential spirits." And in the next line but one, "O strange and fasten'd villain." Strong is determined, resolute. Our ancestors often used it in an ill sense; as strong thief, strong hore, &c.

¹⁷ Instead of "I never got him" the folio reads "said he?" and wher instead of why in the next line. The folio is very incorrectly printed in this part. Below, it has strangeness for strange ews.

Hark, the duke's trumpets! I know not why he comes^a:—

All ports I'll bar; the villain shall not 'scape;
The duke must grant me that: besides, his picture
I will send far and near, that all the kingdom
May have due note of him; and of my land,
Loyal and natural boy, I'll work the means
To make thee capable¹⁸.

Enter CORNWALL, REGAN, and Attendants.

Corn. How now, my noble friend! since I came hither
(Which I can call but now), I have heard strange news.

Reg. If it be true, all vengeance comes too short,
Which can pursue the offender. How dost, my lord?

Glo. O, madam, my old heart is crack'd, it's crack'd!

Reg. What, did my father's godson seek your life?
He whom my father nam'd? your Edgar?

Glo. O lady, lady, shame would have it hid!

Reg. Was he not companion with the riotous knights
That tend upon my father?

Glo. I know not, madam: 'Tis too bad, too bad.

Edm. Yes, madam, he was of that consort.

Reg. No marvel then, though he were ill affected;
'Tis they have put him on the old man's death,
To have th'expense and waste of his revenues.
I have this present evening from my sister
Been well inform'd of them; and with such cautions,
That, if they come to sojourn at my house,
I'll not be there.

Corn. Nor I, assure thee, Regan.—

^a The folio has, "I know not wher he comes;" most probably a construction for wherefore.

¹⁸ i. e. capable of succeeding to my land, notwithstanding the legal bar of thy illegitimacy.

"The king next demanded of him (he being a fool) whether he were capable to inherit any land," &c.—Life and Death of Will Somers, &c.

Edmund, I hear that you have shown your father
A child-like office.

Edm. 'Twas my duty, sir.

Glo. He did bewray his practice¹⁹, and receiv'd
This hurt you see, striving to apprehend him.

Corn. Is he pursued?

Glo. Ay, my good lord.

Corn. If he be taken, he shall never more
Be fear'd of doing harm : make your own purpose,
How in my strength you please.—For you, Edmund,
Whose virtue and obedience doth this instant
So much commend itself, you shall be ours ;
Natures of such deep trust we shall much need ;
You we first seize on.

Edm. I shall serve you, sir,
Truly, however else.

Glo. For him I thank your grace.

Corn. You know not why we came to visit you,—

Reg. Thus out of season ; threading dark-ey'd night.
Occasions, noble Gloster, of some poize²⁰,
Wherein we must have use of your advice :—
Our father he hath writ, so hath our sister,
Of differences, which I best thought it fit
To answer from our home²¹ ; the several messengers
From hence attend despatch. Our good old friend,
Lay comforts to your bosom ; and bestow
Your needful counsel to our business,
Which craves the instant use.

Glo. I serve you, madam :
Your graces are right welcome. [Exeunt.]

¹⁹ " He did bewray his practice." That is, " He did betray or reveal his treacherous devices." So in the second book of Sidney's Arcadia :—" His heart fainted and gat a conceit, that with bewraying his practice he might obtain pardon." The quartos read betray.

²⁰ i. e. " of some weight or moment." The folio and one quarto read prize. The preceding line ought probably to be given to Cornwall.

²¹ That is not at home, but at some other place.

SCENE II. Before Gloster's Castle.Enter KENT and Steward, severally.

Stew. Good dawning¹ to thee, friend: Art of the house?

Kent. Ay.

Stew. Where may we set our horses?

Kent. I' the mire.

Stew. 'Pr'ythee, if thou lov'st me, tell me.

Kent. I love thee not.

Stew. Why, then I care not for thee.

Kent. If I had thee in Lipsbury pinfeld², I would make thee care for me.

Stew. Why dost thou use me thus? I know thee not.

Kent. Fellow, I know thee.

Stew. What dost thou know me for?

Kent. A knave; a rascal, an eater of broken meats; a base, proud, shallow, beggarly, three-suited³, hun-

¹ The quartos read, "good even." Dawning is used again in Cymbeline, as a substantive, for morning. It is clear from various passages in this scene, that the morning is just beginning to dawn.

² i. e. Lipsbury pound. "Lipsbury pinfeld" may, perhaps, like Lob's pound, be a coined name; but with what allusion does not appear.

³ "Three-suited knave" might mean, in an age of ostentatious finery like that of Shakespeare, one who had no greater change of raiment than three suits would furnish him with. So in Ben Jonson's Silent Woman:—"Wert a pitiful fellow, and hadst nothing but three suits of apparel." A one-trunk-inheriting slave may be a term used to describe a fellow, the whole of whose possessions were confined to one coffer, and that too inherited from his father, who was no better provided, or had nothing more to bequeath to his successor in poverty; a poor rogue hereditary, as Timon calls Apemantus. A worsted-stocking knave is another reproach of the same kind. The stockings in England in the reign of Elizabeth were remarkably expensive. Yet Stubbes, in his Anatomic of Abuses, says, "those who have not above forty shil-dred-pound, filthy worsted-stocking knave; a lily-liver'd, action-taking knave; a whoreson, glass-gazing, super serviceable, finical rogue; one-trunk-inheriting slave; one that would'st be a bawd, in way of good-service, and art nothing but the composition of a knave, beggar, coward, pandar, and the son and heir of a mongrel bitch: one whom I will beat into clamorous whining, if thou deny'st the least syllable of thy addition⁴.

Stew. Why, what a monstrous fellow art thou, thus to rail on one, that is neither known of thee, nor knows thee!

Kent. What a brazen-faced varlet art thou, to deny thou know'st me! Is it two days ago, since I tripp'd up thy heels, and beat thee, before the king? Draw, you rogue: for, though it be night, the moon shines; I'll make a sop o' the moonshine⁵ of you: Draw, you whoreson cullionly barber-monger⁶, draw.

[Drawing his Sword.

Stew. Away; I have nothing to do with thee.

Kent. Draw, you rascal: you come with letters lings a year wages, will not stick to have two or three pair of these silk nether stocks, or else of the finest yarn that may be got, though the price of them be a ryall or twenty shillings." In an old comedy, called The Hog hath Lost its Pearl, by R. Taylor, 1614, it is said:—"Good parts are no more set by, than a good leg in a woollen stocking." This term of reproach, as well as that of a hundred pound gentleman, occurs in The Phoenix, by Middleton. Action-taking knave is a fellow who, if you beat him, would bring an action for the assault instead of resenting it like a man of courage.

⁴ i. e. thy titles. The description of a person in legal documents is called his addition.

⁵ An equivoque is here intended, by an allusion to the old dish of eggs in moonshine, which was eggs broken and boiled in salad oil till the yolks became hard. It is equivalent to the phrases of modern times, "I'll baste you," or "beat you to a mummy."

⁶ Barber-monger may mean dealer with the lower tradesmen; a slur upon the Steward, as taking fees for a recommendation to the business of the family.

against the king ; and take vanity the puppet's⁷ part, against the royalty of her father : Draw, you rogue, or I'll so carbonado your shanks :—draw, you rascal : come your ways.

Stew. Help, ho ! murder ! help !

Kent. Strike, you slave ; stand, rogue, stand ; you neat slave⁸, strike. [Beating him.]

Stew. Help, ho ! murder ! murder !

Enter EDMUND, CORNWALL, REGAN, GLOSTER, and Servants.

Edm. How now ? What's the matter ? Part.

Kent. With you, goodman boy, if you please ; come, I'll flesh you ; come on, young master.

Glo. Weapons ! arms ! What's the matter here ?

Corn. Keep peace, upon your lives ;
He dies, that strikes again : What is the matter ?

Reg. The messengers from our sister and the king.

Corn. What is your difference ? speak.

Stew. I am scarce in breath, my lord.

Kent. No marvel, you have so bestirr'd your valour. You cowardly rascal, nature disclaims in⁹ thee, a tailor made thee.

Corn. Thou art a strange fellow : a tailor make a man ?

Kent. Ay, a tailor, sir ; a stone-cutter, or a painter, could not have made him so ill, though they had been but two hours at the trade¹⁰.

Corn. Speak yet, how grew your quarrel ?

⁷ Puppet is here merely a term of contempt for a female.

⁸ Neat slave may mean, you base cowherd, or it may mean, as Steevens suggests, you finical rascal, you assemblage of foppery and poverty. See Cotgrave, in Mirloret, Mistoudin, Mondinet ; by which Sherwood renders a neate fellow.

⁹ To disclaim in, for to disclaim simply, was the phraseology of the poet's age. See Gifford's Ben Jenson, vol. iii. p. 264.

¹⁰ The folio has, "but two years."

Stew. This ancient ruffian, sir, whose life I have spar'd,

At suit of his gray beard,—

Kent. Thou whoreson zed¹¹! thou unnecessary letter!—My lord, if you will give me leave, I will tread this unbolted¹² villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a jakes with him.—Spare my gray beard, you wagtail!

Corn. Peace, sirrah!

You beastly knave, know you no reverence?

Kent. Yes, sir; but anger hath a privilege.

Corn. Why art thou angry?

Kent. That such a slave as this should wear a sword,
Who wears no honesty. Such smiling rogues as these,
Like rats, oft bite the holy cords atwain
Which are too intrinse¹³ t'unloose: smooth every passion¹⁴

That in the natures of their lords rebels;

¹¹ Zed is here used as a term of contempt, because it is the last letter in the English alphabet: it is said to be an unnecessary letter, because its place may be supplied by S. Baret omits it in his Alvearie, affirming it to be rather a syllable than a letter. And Mulcaster says, "Z is much harder amongst us, and seldom seen. S is become its lieutenant-general. It is lightlie (i. e. hardly) expressed in English, saving in foren enfranchisements."

¹² Unbolted is unsifted; and therefore signifies this coarse villain. Massinger, in his New Way to Pay Old Debts, Act i. Sc. 1, says:—

"I will help your memory,
And tread thee into mortar."

Unbolted mortar is mortar made of unsifted lime; and therefore to break the lumps it is necessary to tread it by men in wooden shoes.

¹³ The quartos read, intrench; the folio, t'intrince. Perhaps intrinse, for so it should be written, was put by Shakespeare for intrinsecate, which he has used in Antony and Cleopatra:—

"Come, mortal wretch,

With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsecate
Of life at once untie."

¹⁴ See Pericles, Act i. Sc. 2, note 9.

Bring oil to fire, snow to their colder moods ;
 Renege¹⁵, affirm, and turn their halcyon¹⁶ beaks
 With every gale and vary of their masters,
 As knowing nought, like dogs, but following.—
 A plague upon your epileptick visage!¹⁷
 Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool ?
 Goose, if I had you upon Sarum plain,
 I'd drive ye cackling home to Camelot¹⁸.

Corn. What, art thou mad, old fellow ?

Glo. How fell you out ?

Say that.

Kent. No contraries hold more antipathy,
 Than I and such a knave¹⁹.

Corn. Why dost thou call him knave ? What is his fault²⁰ ?

Kent. His countenance likes me not.

Corn. No more, perchance, does mine, or his, or hers.

Kent. Sir, 'tis my occupation to be plain ;
 I have seen better faces in my time,
 Than stands on any shoulder that I see
 Before me at this instant.

Corn. This is some fellow,

⁵ To renege is to deny. See Antony and Cleopatra, Sc. 1, note 1. The folio misprints it Reuenge, and Being for Bring in the preceding line.

¹⁶ The bird called the kingfisher, which, when dried and hung up by a thread, is supposed to turn his bill to the point from whence the wind blows. So in Marlowe's Jew of Malta, 1633 :—

“ But how now stands the wind ?

Into what corner peers my halcyon's bill.”

“ A lytle byrde called the Kings Fysher, being hanged up in the ayre by the neck, his nebbe or byll wyll be always direct or strayght against y^e winde.”—Book of Notable Things.

¹⁷ i. e. a visage distorted by grinning.

¹⁸ In Somersetsshire, near Camelot, are many large moors, where are bred great quantities of geese. It was the place where the romances say King Arthur kept his court in the west.

¹⁹ Hence Pope's expression :—

“ The strong antipathy of good to bad.”

²⁰ Thus the folio. The quartos, “ What's his offence ? ”

Who, having been prais'd for bluntness, doth affect
 A saucy roughness ; and constrains the garb,
 Quite from his nature²¹: He cannot flatter, he!—
 An honest mind and plain,—he must speak truth :
 An they will take it, so ; if not, he's plain.
 These kind of knaves I know, which in this plainness
 Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
 Than twenty silly²² ducking observants,
 That stretch their duties nicely.

Kent. Sir, in good sooth, in sincere verity,
 Under the allowance of your great aspect²³,
 Whose influence, like the wreath of radiant fire
 On flickering²⁴ Phœbus' front,—

Corn. What mean'st by this ?

Kent. To go out of my dialect, which you discom-mend so much. I know, sir, I am no flatterer : he that beguiled you, in a plain accent, was a plain knave ; which, for my part, I will not be, though I should win your displeasure to entreat me to it²⁵.

Corn. What was the offence you gave him ?

Stew. I never gave him any :
 It pleas'd the king his master, very late,
 To strike at me, upon his misconstruction :
 When he, compact²⁶, and flattering his displeasure,

²¹ " Forces his outside, or his appearance, to something totally different from his natural disposition."

²² Silly, or rather sely, is simple or rustic. See Cymbeline, Act v. Sc. iii. note 9. Nicely here is with scrupulous nicety, punctilious observance.

²³ The quartos have, "grand aspect."

²⁴ This expressive word is now only applied to the motion and scintillation of flame. Dr. Johnson says that it means to flutter, which is certainly one of its oldest meanings, it being used in that sense by Chaucer. But its application is more properly made to the fluctuating scintillations of flame or light. In The Cuckoo, by Nicols, 1607, we have it applied to the eye:—

" Their soft maiden voice and flickering eye."

²⁵ i. e. " Though I should win you, displeas'd as you now are, to like me so well as to entreat me to be a knave."

²⁶ The quartos have, "conjunct;" both words mean in concert with.

Tripp'd me behind ; being down, insulted, rail'd,
 And put upon him such a deal of man,
 That worthied him, got praises of the king
 For him attempting who was self-subdu'd ;
 And, in the fleshment²⁷ of this dread exploit,
 Drew on me here again.

Kent. None of these rogues, and cowards,
 But Ajax is their fool²⁸.

Corn. Fetch forth the stocks, ho !
 You stubborn ancient knave, you reverend braggart,
 We'll teach you—

Kent. Sir, I am too old to learn :
 Call not your stocks for me : I serve the king ;
 On whose employment I was sent to you :
 You shall do small respect, show too bold malice
 Against the grace and person of my master,
 Stocking his messenger.

Corn. Fetch forth the stocks :
 As I've life and honour, there shall he sit till noon.

Reg. Till noon ! till night, my lord ; and all night too.

Kent. Why, madam, if I were your father's dog,
 You should not use me so.

Reg. Sir, being his knave, I will.

[Stocks brought out

Corn. This is a fellow of the self-same colour

²⁷ A young soldier is said to flesh his sword the first time he draws blood with it. Fleshment, therefore, is here metaphorically applied to the first act of service, which Kent, in his new capacity, had performed for his master ; and at the same time, in a sarcastic sense, as though he had esteemed it an heroic exploit to trip a man behind who was actually falling.

²⁸ i. e. Ajax is a fool to them. "These rogues and cowards talk in such a boasting strain that, if we were to credit their account of themselves, Ajax would appear a person of no prowess when compared to them." So in King Henry VIII.—

"Now this mask
 Was cry'd incomparable, and the ensuing night
 Made it a fool and beggar."

Our sister speaks of:—Come, bring away the stocks²⁹.

Glo. Let me beseech your grace not to do so:
 [His fault is much, and the good king his master
 Will check him for't: your purpos'd low correction
 Is such, as basest and contemned'st wretches,
 For pilferings and most common trespasses,
 Are punish'd with:]³⁰ the king must take it ill,
 That he,—so slightly valu'd in his messenger,
 —Should have him thus restrain'd.

Corn.

I'll answer that.

Reg. My sister may receive it much more worse,
 To have her gentleman abus'd, assaulted,
 [For following her affairs.—Put in his legs³¹.]—

[KENT is put in the Stocks.

Come, my lord, away.

[Exeunt all except GLOSTER and KENT.

Glo. I am sorry for thee, friend; 'tis the duke's pleasure,
 Whose disposition, all the world well knows,
 Will not be rubb'd, nor stopp'd³²; I'll entreat for thee.

Kent. 'Pray, do not, sir: I have watch'd, and travell'd hard;
 Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle.
 A good man's fortune may grow out at heels:
 Give you good morrow!

²⁹ This kind of exhibition was familiar to the ancient stage in Hick Scorer, which was printed in the reign of Henry VIII. Pity is put into the stocks, and left there until he is freed by Perseverance and Contemplacyon.

It should be remembered that formerly in great houses, as lately in some colleges, there were moveable stocks for the correction of the servants.

³⁰ The passage in brackets is not in the folio, which, in consequence of the omission, reads, "The king, his master, needs must take it ill."

³¹ This line is also omitted in the folio which gives the words "Come, my lord away" to Cornwall.

³² A metaphor from bowling.

Glo. The duke's to blame in this ; 'twill be ill taken. [Exit.

Kent. Good king, that must approve the common saw³³!

Thou out of heaven's benediction com'st
To the warm sun !

Approach, thou beacon to this under globe,
That by thy comfortable beams I may
Peruse this letter !—Nothing almost sees miracles,
But misery ;—I know 'tis from Cordelia ;
Who hath most fortunately been inform'd
Of my obscured course ;—and shall find time
From this enormous state,—seeking,—to give Losses their remedies³⁴.—All weary and o'erwatch'd,
Take vantage, heavy eyes, not to behold
This shameful lodging.

Fortune, good night ; smile once more ; turn thy wheel !
[He sleeps.

³³ The saw, or proverb alluded to, is in Heywood's Dialogues on Proverbs, b. ii. c. v.—

“ In your running from him to me ye runne
Out of God's blessing into the warme sunne.”

i. e. from good to worse. Kent was thinking of the king being likely to receive a worse reception from Regan than that which he had already experienced from Goneril. See note on Much Ado about Nothing, Act ii. Sc. i. note 22.

³⁴ How much has been written about this passage, and how much it has been mistaken ! Its evident meaning appears to me to be as follows :—Kent addresses the sun, for whose rising he is impatient, that he may read Cordelia's letter. “ Nothing,” says he, “ almost sees miracles, but misery : I know this letter which I hold in my hand is from Cordelia ; who hath most fortunately been informed of my disgrace and wandering in disguise,” &c. He then finds he cannot follow his train of thought for weariness, and so breaks off and settles himself to sleep. I cannot imagine, with Mr. Collier, that it is meant to express the incoherent reading of a letter.

SCENE III. A Part of the Heath.Enter EDGAR.

Edg. I heard myself proclaim'd ;
 And, by the happy hollow of a tree,
 Escap'd the hunt. No port is free ; no place,
 That guard, and most unusual vigilance,
 Does not attend my taking. While I may 'scape,
 I will preserve myself : and am bethought
 To take the basest and most poorest shape,
 That ever penury, in contempt of man,
 Brought near to beast : my face I'll grime with filth ;
 Blanket my loins ; elf all my hair in knots¹ ;
 And with presented nakedness outface
 The winds, and persecutions of the sky.
 The country gives me proof and precedent
 Of Bedlam beggars², who, with roaring voices,

¹ Hair thus knotted was supposed to be the work of elves and fairies in the night. So in Romeo and Juliet :—

“Plats the manes of horses in the night,

And bakes the elf-locks in foul sluttish hairs,
 Which, once untangled, much misfortune bodes.”

² Aubrey, in his MS. Remaines of Gentilisme and Judaisme, Part III. p. 234, b. (MS. Lansdowne, 226), says :—“Before the civil warrs, I remember Tom a Bedlams went about begging. They had been such as had been in Bedlam, and come to some degree of sobernesse ; and when they were licenced to goe out, they had on their left arme an armilla of tinne printed, of about three inches breadth, which was sodered on.”—H. Ellis.

Randle Holme, in his Academy of Arms and Blazon, b. iii. c. 3, gives the following description of a class of vagabonds feigning themselves mad :—“The Bedlam is in the same garb, with a long staff, and a cow or ox-horn by his side ; but his cloathing is more fantastick and ridiculous ; for being a mad-man, he is madly decked and dressed all over with rubins, feathers, cuttings of cloth, and what not ; to make him seem a mad-man, or one distracted, when he is no other than a dissembling knave.”

In The Bell-Man of London, by Decker, 5th edit. 1640, is another account of one of these characters, under the title of

Strike in their numb'd and mortified bare arms
 Pins, wooden pricks³, nails, sprigs of rosemary ;
 And with this horrible object, from low farms,
 Poor pelting⁴ villages, sheep-cotes, and mills,
 Sometime with lunatick bans⁵, sometime with prayers,
 Enforce their charity.—Poor Turlygod⁶! poor Tom!
 That's something yet; Edgar I nothing am. [Exit.

Abraham Man :—“ He swears he hath been in Bedlam, and will talke frantickely of purpose: you see pinnes stuck in sundry places of his naked flesh, especially in his armes, which paine he gladly puts himselfe to, only to make you believe he is out of his wits. He calls himselfe by the name of Poore Tom, and, coming near any body, cries out, Poor Tom is a-cold. Of these Abraham-men some be exceeding merry, and doe nothing but sing songs fashioned out of their own braines: some will dance, others will doe nothing but either laugh or weepe: others are dogged, and so sullen both in looke and speech, that spying but a small company in a house they boldly and bluntly enter, compelling the servants through feare to give them what they demand.” It is probable, as Steevens remarks, that to sham Abraham, a cant term still in use among sailors and the vulgar, may have this origin.

⁴ i. e. paltry. Vide vol. ii. p. 325, note 6.

⁵ i. e. curses.

⁶ Turlygod, an English corruption of turluru, Ital.; or turlureau, Fr.; both, among other things, signifying a fool or madman. It would perhaps be difficult to decide with certainty whether those words are corruptions of turlupino and turlupin; but at least it seems probable. The Turlupins were a fanatical sect, which overran the continent in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, calling themselves Beghards or Beghins. Their manners and appearance exhibited the strongest indications of lunacy and distraction; and their popular name, Turlupins, was probably derived from the wolfish howlings they made in their fits of religious raving. Genebrard thus describes them:—“Turlupin cynicorum sectam suscitantes, de nuditate pudendorum, et publico coitu.” It has not been remarked that Cotgrave interprets “Mon Turelureau, MY PILLICOCK, my pretty knave.”

SCENE IV. *Before Gloster's Castle*¹.

Enter LEAR, Fool, and Gentleman.

Lear. 'Tis strange, that they should so depart from home,
And not send back my messenger.

Gent. As I learn'd,
The night before there was no purpose in them
Of this remove.

Kent. Hail to thee, noble master!

Lear. Ha!
Mak'st thou this shame thy pastime?

Kent. No, my lord.

Fool. Ha, ha! look! he wears cruel² garters!
Horses are tied by the heads; dogs, and bears, by the neck; monkeys by the loins, and men by the legs:
when a man is over-lusty at legs, then he wears wooden nether-stocks³.

Lear. What's he, that hath so much thy place mistook
To set thee here?

Kent. It is both he and she,
Your son and daughter.

Lear. No.

Kent. Yes.

Lear. No, I say.

¹ See note 1, Act i. Sc. v. ante.

² A quibble on crewell, i. e. worsted. So in The Two Angry Women of Abingdon:—

“I'll warrant you, he'll have

His cruell garters cross about the knee.”

³ The old word for stockings; but the obvious allusion is to the stocks in which Kent is placed. This seems to show that Falstaff means a pun in his allusion to nether-stocks. Probably it was proverbially current.

Kent. I say, yea.

[Lear. No, no; they would not.

Kent. Yes, they have.]

Lear. By Jupiter, I swear, no.

Kent. By Juno, I swear, ay⁴.

Lear. They durst not do't;

They could not, would not do't; 'tis worse than murder,

To do, upon respect, such violent outrage⁵:

Resolve me, with all modest haste, which way

Thou might'st deserve, or they impose, this usage,

Coming from us.

Kent.

My lord, when at their home

I did commend your highness' letters to them,

Ere I was risen from the place that show'd

My duty kneeling, came there a reeking post,

Stew'd in his haste, half breathless, panting forth,

From Goneril his mistress, salutations:

Deliver'd letters, spite of intermission⁶,

Which presently they read; on whose contents,

They summon'd up their meiny⁷, straight took horse;

Commanded me to follow, and attend

⁴ This dialogue being taken partly from the folio and partly from the quarto, is left without any metrical division, as it was not probably all intended to be preserved.

⁵ To do, upon respect, such violent outrage, I think, means, "to do such violent outrage deliberately, or upon consideration." Respect is frequently used for consideration by Shakespeare. But perhaps, "To do such violent outrage upon the respect due to a privileged person," may be what is meant. I cannot think that it is intended for a personification, as Malone asserts.

⁶ i. e. spite of leaving me unanswered for a time. Goneril's messenger delivered letters, which they read notwithstanding Lear's messenger was yet kneeling unanswered.

⁷ Meiny, signifying a family, household, or retinue of servants, is certainly from the French meinie, or, as it was anciently written, mesnie; which word is regarded by Du Cange as equivalent with mesonie, or maisonie, from maison; in modern French, menage. It does not appear that the Saxons used many for a family or household.

The leisure of their answer ; gave me cold looks :
 And meeting here the other messenger,
 Whose welcome, I perceiv'd, had poison'd mine
 (Being the very fellow that of late Display'd so saucily against your highness),
 Having more man than wit about me, drew⁸ ;
 He rais'd the house with loud and coward cries :
 Your son and daughter found this trespass worth
 The shame which here it suffers.

Fool. Winter's not gone yet, if the wild geese fly that way⁹.

Fathers, that wear rags,
 Do make their children blind ;
 But fathers, that bear bags,
 Shall see their children kind.
 Fortune, that arrant whore,
 Ne'er turns the key to the poor.

But, for all this, thou shalt have as many dolours¹⁰ from thy daughters, as thou canst tell in a year.

Lear. O, how this mother¹¹ swells up toward my heart !

⁸ The personal pronoun, which is found in the preceding line, is understood before the word having, or before drew. The same licence is taken by Shakespeare in other places. See Cymbeline, Act iv. Sc. 3, note 1.

⁹ i. e. "if this be their behaviour, the king's troubles are not yet at an end." This speech is omitted in the quartos.

¹⁰ A quibble between dolours and dollars. The folio reads "for thy daughters."

¹¹ Lear affects to pass off the swelling of his heart, ready to burst with grief and indignation for the disease called the mother, or hysterica passio, which, in the poet's time, was not thought peculiar to women only. It is probable that Shakespeare had this suggested to him by a passage in Harsnet's Declaration of Popish Impostures, which he may have consulted in order to furnish out his character of Tom of Bedlam with demoniacal gibberish. "Ma. Maynie had a spice of the hysterica passio, as seems, from his youth ; he himself termes it the moother." P. 25. It seems the priests persuaded him it was from the possession of the devil. "The disease I spake of was a spice of the mother,

Hysterica passio! down, thou climbing sorrow,
Thy element's below!—Where is this daughter?

Kent. With the earl, sir, here within.

Lear.

Follow me not;

Stay here.

[Exit.

Gent. Made you no more offence than what you speak of?

Kent. None.

How chance the king comes with so small a number¹²?

Fool. An thou hadst been set i' the stocks for that question, thou'dst well deserved it.

Kent. Why, fool?

Fool. We'll set thee to school to an ant¹³, to teach thee there's no labouring in the winter. All that follow their noses are led by their eyes, but blind men; and there's not a nose among twenty, but can smell him that's stinking¹⁴. Let go thy hold, when wherewith I had been troubled before my going into Fraunce:

whether I doe rightly term it the mother or no, I knowe not. A Scottish Doctor of Physick, then in Paris, called it, as I remember, virtiginem capitis. It riseth of a winde in the bottome of the belly, and proceeding with a great swelling, causeth a very painful collicke in the stomach, and an extraordinary giddines in the head," p. 263.

¹² The quartos have train.

¹³ "Go to the ant, thou sluggard," says Solomon; "learn her ways, and be wise: which having no guide, overseer, or ruler, provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in harvest." If, says the fool, you had been schooled by the ant, you would have known that the king's train, like that sagacious insect, prefer the summer of prosperity to the colder season of adversity, from which no profit can be derived; and desert him whose "mellow-hangings" have been all shaken down, and who by "one winter's brush" has been left "open and bare for every storm that blows."

¹⁴ All men, but blind men, though they follow their noses, are led by their eyes; and this class of mankind, seeing the king ruined, have all deserted him: with respect to the blind, who have nothing but their noses to guide them, they also fly equally from a king whose fortunes are declining; for of the noses of blind men there is not one in twenty but can smell him who, bea great wheel runs down a hill, lest it break thy neck with following it ; but the great one that goes up the hill¹⁵, let him draw thee after. When a wise man gives thee better counsel, give me mine again : I would have none but knaves follow it, since a fool gives it.

That, sir, which serves and seeks for gain,
And follows but for form,
Will pack, when it begins to rain,
And leave thee in the storm.
But I will tarry, the fool will stay,
And let the wise man fly :
The knave turns fool, that runs away ;
The fool no knave, perdy.

Kent. Where learn'd you this, fool ?

Fool. Not i' the stocks, fool.

Re-enter LEAR, with GLOSTER.

Lear. Deny to speak with me ? They are sick ?
they are weary ?

They have travell'd hard to-night ? Mere fetches ;
The images of revolt and flying off !
Fetch me a better answer.

Glo. My dear lord,
You know the fiery quality of the duke ;
How unremoveable and fix'd he is
In his own course.

Lear. Vengeance ! plague ! death ! confusion !—
Fiery ? what quality ? Why, Gloster, Gloster,
I'd speak with the duke of Cornwall, and his wife.

Glo. Well, my good lord, I have inform'd them so.

Lear. Inform'd them ! Dost thou understand me,
man ?

ing "muddy'd in fortune's mood, smells somewhat strong of her displeasure." You need not therefore be surprised at Lear's coming with so small a train.

¹⁵ The folio has upward.

Glo. Ay, my good lord.

Lear. The king would speak with Cornwall; the dear father

Would with his daughter speak, commands her service¹⁶:

Are they inform'd of this¹⁷? — My breath and blood! —

Fiery? the fiery duke? — Tell the hot duke, that—
No, but not yet: — may be, he is not well:

Infirmity doth still neglect all office,

Whereto our health is bound; we are not ourselves

When nature, being oppress'd, commands the mind

To suffer with the body: I'll forbear;

And am fallen out with my more headier will,

To take the indispos'd and sickly fit

For the sound man. Death on my state! wherefore

[Looking on KENT.]

Should he sit here? This act persuades me,

That this remotion of the duke and her

Is practice only. Give me my servant forth:

Go, tell the duke and's wife, I'd speak with them,

Now, presently: bid them come forth and hear me,

Or at their chamber door I'll beat the drum,

Till it cry sleep to death¹⁸.

Glo. I'd have all well betwixt you. [Exit.]

Lear. O me, my heart, my rising heart! — but,
down.

Fool. Cry to it, nuncle, as the cockney¹⁹ did to

¹⁶ The folio reads, "commands, tends, service."

¹⁷ This line is not in the quartos.

¹⁸ The meaning of this passage seems to be, "I'll beat the drum till it causes the death of sleep; i. e. awakens them, causes them to sleep no more."

¹⁹ In the Tournament of Tottenham, a cokenay signifies a cook. Bullokar, in his Expositor, 1616, under the word Cockney, says, "It is sometimes taken for a child that is tenderly or wantonly brought up; or for one that has been brought up in some great town, and knows nothing of the country fashion. It is used also the eels, when she put them i' the paste alive; she rapp'd 'em o' the coxcombs with a stick, and cry'd, Down, wantons, down: 'Twas her brother, that in pure kindness to his horse, butter'd his hay.

Enter CORNWALL, REGAN, GLOSTER, and Servants.

Lear. Good morrow to you both.

Corn. Hail to your grace!

[KENT is set at liberty.]

Reg. I am glad to see your highness.

Lear. Regan, I think you are; I know what reason I have to think so: if thou should'st not be glad, I would divorce me from thy mother's tomb, Sepulchring an adultrous.—O, are you free?

[To KENT.]

Some other time for that.—Beloved Regan, Thy sister's naught: O Regan! she hath tied Sharp-tooth'd unkindness, like a vulture here,— for a Londoner, or one born in or near the city; as we say, within the sound of Bow bell." The etymology, says Mr. Nares, seems most probable, which derives it from cooking. Le pays de cocagne, or coquaine, in old French, means a country of good cheer. Cocagna, in Italian, has the same meaning. Both might be derived from coquina. This famous country, if it could be found, is described as a region "where the hills were made of sugar-candy, and the loaves ran down the hills, crying Come eat me." Some lines in Camden's Remains seem to make cokeney a name for London as well as its inhabitants. This Lubberland, as Florio calls it, seems to have been proverbial for the simplicity or gullibility of its inhabitants. A cockney and a ninny-hammer, or simpleton, were convertible terms. Thus Chaucer, in The Reve's Tale:—

[Points to his Heart.]

"I shall be holden a daffe or a cokeney."

Decker, in his Newes from Hell, 1568, says, "'Tis not our fault; but our mother's, our cockering mothers, who for their labour made us to be called cockneys." The reader will find a curious article on the subject in Mr. Douce's Illustrations of Shakespeare, vol. ii. p. 151.

I can scarce speak to thee ; thou'lt not believe,
Of how depriv'd a quality——O Regan !

Reg. I pray you, sir, take patience ; I have hope,
You less know how to value her desert,
Than she to scant her duty²⁰.

Lear. Say, how is that²¹ ?

Reg. I cannot think, my sister in the least
Would fail her obligation : If, sir, perchance,
She have restrain'd the riots of your followers,
'Tis on such ground, and to such wholesome end,
As clears her from all blame.

Lear. My curses on her !

Reg. O, sir, you are old ;
Nature in you stands on the very verge
Of her confine : you should be rul'd, and led
By some discretion, that discerns your state
Better than you yourself : Therefore, I pray you,
That to our sister you do make return ;
Say, you have wrong'd her, sir.

Lear. Ask her forgiveness ?
Do you but mark how this becomes the house²² :
“ Dear daughter, I confess that I am old ;
Age is unnecessary²³ : on my knees I beg,

²⁰ It is clear that the intended meaning of this passage is as Steevens observes :—“ You less know how to value her desert, than she (knows) to scant her duty, i. e. to be wanting in it.”

²¹ Say, &c. This line and the following speech is omitted in the quartos.

²² i. e. the order of families, duties of relation. So Sir Thomas Smith, in his Commonwealth of England, 1601 :—“ The house I call here, the man, the woman, their children, their servants, bond and free.” Capel thought it intended to express “ fathers, who are not the heads only of a house or family, but its representatives ; they are the house.”

²³ Age is unnecessary appears to mean, old people are useless. So in The Old Law, by Massinger :—

“ Your laws extend not to desert,
But to unnecessary years, and, my lord,
His are not such.”

That you'll vouchsafe me raiment, bed, and food."

Reg. Good sir, no more; these are unsightly tricks:
Return you to my sister.

Lear. Never, Regan:

She hath abated me of half my train;
Look'd black upon me: struck me with her tongue,
Most serpent-like, upon the very heart:—
All the stor'd vengeance of heaven fall
On her ingrateful top! Strike her young bones,
You taking airs, with lameness!

Corn. Fye, sir, fye!

Lear. You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames

Into her scornful eyes! Infect her beauty,
You fen-suck'd fogs, drawn by the powerful sun,
To fall²⁴ and blast her pride!

Reg. O the blest gods! So will you wish on me,
When the rash mood is on.

Lear. No, Regan, thou shalt never have my curse;
Thy tender-hearted²⁵ nature shall not give Thee o'er to harshness; her eyes are fierce, but thine
Do comfort, and not burn: 'Tis not in thee
To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train,
To bandy hasty words, to scant my sizes²⁶,
And, in conclusion, to oppose the bolt
Against my coming in: thou better know'st

²⁴ The folio has "To fall and blister." Fall seems here to be used as an active verb, signifying to humble or pull down. "Ye fen-suck'd fogs, drawn from the earth by the powerful action of the sun, infect her beauty, so as to fall and blast, i. e. humble and destroy her pride."

²⁵ The quarto has, "tender-hested;" the folio, "tender-hefted;" neither of which have any meaning, but are mere misprints for tender-hearted, an epithet occurring again in King Richard II. Act iii. Sc. 3.

²⁶ A size is a portion or allotment of food. The word and its origin are explained in Minsheu's Guide to Tongues, 1617. The term sizer is still used at Cambridge for one of the lowest rank of students, living on a stated allowance.

The offices of nature, bond of childhood,
Effects of courtesy, dues of gratitude ;
Thy half o' the kingdom hast thou not forgot²⁷,
Wherein I thee endow'd.

Reg. Good sir, to th'purpose.
[Trumpets within.]

Lear. Who put my man i' the stocks ?

Corn. What trumpet's that ?

Enter Steward.

Reg. I know't, my sister's²⁸ ; this approves her letter,
That she would soon be here.—Is your lady come ?

Lear. This is a slave, whose easy-borrow'd pride
Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows :—
Out, varlet, from my sight !

Corn. What means your grace ?

Lear. Who stock'd my servant ? Regan, I have good hope
Thou didst not know on't.—Who comes here ? O heavens !

Enter GONERIL.

If you do love old men, if your sweet sway
Allow²⁹ obedience, if you yourselves are old³⁰,

²⁷ It is evident that thou here should be emphatic, and that it is an assertion not a question.

²⁸ Thus in Othello :—

“ The Moor,—I know his trumpet.”

It should seem therefore that the approach of great personages was announced by some distinguishing note or tune appropriately used by their own trumpeters. Cornwall knows not the present sound ; but to Regan, who had often heard her sister's trumpet, the first flourish of it was as familiar as was that of the Moor to the ears of Iago.

²⁹ To allow is to approve, in old phraseology. Thus in Psalm xi. ver. 6 :—“ The Lord alloweth the righteous.”

³⁰ “ Hoc oro, munus concede parenti,
Si tua maturis signentur tempora canis,
Et sis ipse parens.” Statius Theb. x. 705.

Make it your cause; send down, and take my part!—
Art not asham'd to look upon this beard?—

[To GONERIL.

O, Regan! wilt thou take her by the hand?

Gon. Why not by the hand, sir? How have I offended?

All's not offence, that indiscretion finds,
And dotage terms so.

Lear. O, sides, you are too tough!
Will you yet hold?—How came my man i' the stocks?

Corn. I set him there, sir: but his own disorders
Deserv'd much less advancement³¹.

Lear. You! did you?

Reg. I pray you, father, being weak, seem so³².
If, till the expiration of your month,
You will return and sojourn with my sister,
Dismissing half your train, come then to me;
I am now from home, and out of that provision
Which shall be needful for your entertainment.

Lear. Return to her! and fifty men dismiss'd?
No, rather I abjure all roofs, and choose
To wage against the enmity o' the air;
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl,—
Necessity's sharp pinch³³!—Return with her?
Why, the hot-blooded France, that dowerless took
Our youngest born, I could as well be brought To knee his throne, and, squire-like, pension beg
To keep base life afoot;—Return with her?

³¹ By less advancement Cornwall means that Kent's disorders had entitled him to a post of even less honour than the stocks, a still worse or more disgraceful situation.

³² The meaning is, since you are weak, be content to think yourself weak.

³³ The words, Necessity's sharp pinch! appear to be the reflection of Lear on the wretched sort of existence he had described in the preceding lines.

Persuade me rather to be slave and sumpter³⁵
To this detested groom. [Looking on the Steward.

Gon. At your choice, sir.

Lear. I pr'ythee, daughter, do not make me mad;
I will not trouble thee, my child; farewell:
We'll no more meet, no more see one another:—
But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my daughter;
Or rather a disease that's in my flesh,
Which I must needs call mine: thou art a boil,
A plague-sore, an embossed³⁶ carbuncle,
In my corrupted blood. But I'll not chide thee;
Let shame come when it will, I do not call it:
I do not bid the thunder-bearer shoot,
Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Jove:
Mend, when thou canst; be better at thy leisure:
I can be patient; I can stay with Regan,
I, and my hundred knights.

Reg. Not altogether so;
I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided
For your fit welcome: Give ear, sir, to my sister;
For those that mingle reason with your passion,
Must be content to think you old, and so—
But she knows what she does.

Lear. Is this well spoken?

³⁵ Sumpter is generally united with horse or mule, to signify one that carries provisions or other necessaries; from sumptus, Lat. In the present instance horse seems to be understood, as it appears to be in the following passage from Beaumont and Fletcher's Two Noble Gentlemen:—

“I would have had you furnish'd in such pomp
As never duke of Burgundy was furnish'd;
You should have had a sumpter though't had cost me
The laying out myself.”

Perhaps sumpter originally meant the pannier or basket which the sumpter-horse carried. Thus in Cupid's Revenge:—

“And thy base issue shall carry sumpters.”

We hear also of sumpter-cloths, sumpter-saddles, &c.

³⁶ Embossed here means swelling, protuberant.

Reg. I dare avouch it, sir : What, fifty followers ?
Is it not well ? What should you need of more ?
Yea, or so many ? sith that both charge and danger
Speak 'gainst so great a number ? How, in one house,
Should many people, under two commands,
Hold amity ? 'Tis hard ; almost impossible.

Gon. Why might not you, my lord, receive attendance
From those that she calls servants, or from mine ?

Reg. Why not, my lord ? If then they chanc'd to slack you,
We could control them : If you will come to me
(For now I spy a danger), I entreat you
To bring but five and twenty ; to no more
Will I give place or notice.

Lear. I gave you all—

Reg. And in good time you gave it.

Lear. Made you my guardians, my depositaries ;
But kept a reservation to be follow'd
With such a number : What, must I come to you
With five and twenty ? Regan, said you so ?

Reg. And speak't again, my lord ; no more with me.

Lear. Those wicked creatures, yet do look well favour'd,
When others are more wicked ; not being the worst,
Stands in some rank of praise³⁷ :—I'll go with thee ;
[To GONERIL.

Thy fifty yet doth double five and twenty,
And thou art twice her love.

Gon. Hear me, my lord ;
What need you five and twenty, ten, or five,
To follow in a house, where twice so many
Have a command to tend you ?

Reg. What need one ?

Lear. O, reason not the need : our basest beggars

³⁷ i. e. to be not the worst deserves some praise.

Are in the poorest thing superfluous :
 Allow not nature more than nature needs,
 Man's life is cheap³⁸ as beast's : thou art a lady ;
 If only to go warm were gorgeous,
 Why, nature needs not what thou gorgeous wear'st,
 Which scarcely keeps thee warm.—But, for true need,—

You heavens, give me that patience, patience I need !
 You see me here, you gods, a poor old man,
 As full of grief as age ; wretched in both !
 If it be you that stir these daughters' hearts
 Against their father, fool me not so much
 To bear it tamely ; touch me with noble anger !
 O, let not women's weapons, water-drops,
 Stain my man's cheeks !—No, you unnatural hags,
 I will have such revenges on you both,
 That all the world shall—I will do such things,—
 What they are, yet I know not³⁹ ; but they shall be
 The terrors of the earth. You think I'll weep ;
 No, I'll not weep :—
 I have full cause of weeping ; but this heart
 Shall break into a hundred thousand flaws⁴⁰,

³⁸ As cheap here means as little worth. See Baret's Alvearie, 1573. C. 388.

³⁹ “Magnum est quodcunque paravi,
 Quid sit, adhuc dubito.” Ovid. Met. lib. vi.

“Haud quid sit scio,
 Sed grande quiddam est.” Senecæ Thyestes.

Let such as are unwilling to allow that copiers of nature must occasionally use the same thoughts and expressions, remember that of both these authors there were early translations. Golding thus renders the passage from Ovid :—

“The thing that I do purpose on is great, whate'er it is
 I know not what it may be yet.”

⁴⁰ Flaws anciently signified fragments, as well as mere cracks. Among the Saxons it certainly had that meaning, as may be seen in Somner's Dict. Saxon, voce flōh. The word, as Bailey observes, was “especially applied to the breaking off shivers or thin pieces from precious stones.”

Or ere I'll weep :—O, fool, I shall go mad !

[Exeunt LEAR, GLOSTER, KENT, and Fool.

Corn. Let us withdraw, 'twill be a storm.

[Storm heard at a distance.

Reg. This house is little ; the old man and's people
Cannot be well bestow'd.

Gon. 'Tis his own blame ; hath⁴¹ put himself from rest,

And must needs taste his folly.

Reg. For his particular, I'll receive him gladly,
But not one follower.

Gon. So am I purpos'd.
Where is my lord of Gloster ?

Re-enter GLOSTER.

Corn. Follow'd the old man forth :—he is return'd.

Glo. The king is in high rage.

Corn. Whither is he going ?

Glo. He calls to horse ; but will I know not whither.

Corn. 'Tis best to give him way ; he leads himself.

Gon. My lord, entreat him by no means to stay.

Glo. Alack, the night comes on, and the bleak⁴² winds

Do sorely ruffle⁴³ ; for many miles about
There's scarce a bush.

Reg. O, sir, to wilful men,
The injuries, that they themselves procure,
Must be their schoolmasters : Shut up your doors ;
He is attended with a desperate train ;
And what they may incense⁴⁴ him to, being apt
To have his ear abus'd, wisdom bids fear.

⁴¹ Hath is equivalent here to he hath.

⁴² The folio substitutes high for bleak.

⁴³ Thus the folio. The quartos read, "Do sorely ruffle," i. e. rustle. But ruffle is most probably the true reading. See the first note on Macbeth.

⁴⁴ To incense is here, as in other places, to instigate.

Corn. Shut up your doors, my lord : 'tis a wild
night ;

My Regan counsels well ; come out o' the storm.

[Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. A Heath. A Storm is heard, with Thunder and Lightning.

Enter KENT, and a Gentleman, meeting.

Kent.

WHO'S here, beside foul weather ?

Gent. One minded like the weather, most unquietly.

Kent. I know you : Where's the king ?

Gent. Contending with the fretful elements :

Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,

Or swell the curled waters 'bove the main¹,

That things might change, or cease² : [tears his white hair ;

Which the impetuous blasts, with eyeless rage,

Catch in their fury, and make nothing of :

¹ The main seems to signify here the main land, the continent. This interpretation sets the two objects of Lear's desire in proper opposition to each other. He wishes for the destruction of the world, either by the winds blowing the land into the water, or raising the waters so as to overwhelm the land :—

“Terra mari miscebitur, et mare cœlo.”

Lucret. iii. 854.

See also the Æneid, i. 133 ; xii. 204. So in Troilus and Cressida :—

“ The bounded waters

Should lift their bosoms higher than the shores,

And make a sop of all this solid globe.”

² The first folio ends this speech at “change, or cease,” and begins again at Kent's speech, “But who is with him ?”

Strives in his little world of man to out-scorn³
 The to-and-fro-conflicting wind and rain.
 This night, wherein the cub-drawn bear⁴ would couch
 The lion and the belly-pinched wolf
 Keep their fur dry, unbonneted he runs,
 And bids what will take all⁵].

Kent. But who is with him?

Gent. None but the fool; who labours to outjest
 His heart-struck injuries.

Kent. Sir, I do know you;
 And dare upon the warrant of my note⁶,
 Commend a dear thing to you. There is division,
 Although as yet the face of it be cover'd
 With mutual cunning, 'twixt Albany and Cornwall,
 Who have (as who have not, that their great stars⁷ Thron'd and set high?) servants, who seem no less;
 Which are to France the spies and speculators⁸

³ Steevens thinks that we should read "out-storm." The error of printing scorn for storm occurs in the old copies of Troilus and Cressida, and might easily happen from the similarity of the words in old MSS.

⁴ That is, a bear whose dugs are drawn dry by its young. Shakespeare has the same image in As You Like It:—

"A lioness, with udders all drawn dry, Lay couching."

Again ibidem:—

"Food to the suck'd and hungry lioness."

⁵ So in Antony and Cleopatra, Enobarbus says:—

"I'll strike, and cry, Take all."

⁶ The quartos read art.

⁷ This and seven following lines are not in the quartos. The lines in crotchets lower down, from "But, true it is," &c. to the end of the speech, are not in the folio. So that if the speech be read with omission of the former, it will stand according to the first edition; and if the former lines are read, and the latter omitted, it will then stand according to the second. The second edition is generally best, and was probably nearest to Shakespeare's last copy: but in this speech the first is preferable; for in the folio the messenger is sent, he knows not why, he knows not whither.

⁸ The old copy has, erroneously, speculations. The speculators are the observers.

Intelligent of our state ; what hath been seen
 Either in snuffs and packings⁹ of the dukes ;
 Or the hard rein which both of them have borne
 Against the old kind king ; or something deeper,
 Whereof, perchance, these are but furnishings¹⁰ :—
 [But, true it is, from France there comes a power
 Into this scatter'd kingdom ; who already
 Wise in our negligence, have secret feet¹¹
 In some of our best ports, and are at point
 To show their open banner.—Now to you :
 If on my credit you dare build so far
 To make your speed to Dover, you shall find
 Some that will thank you, making just report
 Of how unnatural and bemadding sorrow
 The king hath cause to plain.
 I am a gentleman of blood and breeding ;
 And, from some knowledge and assurance, offer
 This office to you.]

Gent. I will talk farther with you.

Kent.

No, do not.

For confirmation that I am much more
 Than my out-wall, open this purse, and take
 What it contains : If you shall see Cordelia
 (As fear not but you shall), show her this ring ;
 And she will tell you who your fellow¹² is
 That yet you do not know. Fye on this storm !
 I will go seek the king.

Gent. Give me your hand : Have you no more to say

Kent. Few words, but, to effect, more than all yet ;
 That, when we have found the king (in which your pain

⁹ Snuffs are dislikes, and packings, underhand contrivances.

¹⁰ A furnish anciently signified a sample. "To lend the world a furnish of wit, she lays her own out to pawn."—Green's Groats- worth of Wit.

¹¹ i. e. secret footing.

¹² i. e. companion. The folio has, "that fellow."

That way, I'll this,) he that first lights on him,
 Holla the other. [Exeunt severally.

SCENE II. Another Part of the Heath. Storm continues.

Enter LEAR and Fool.

Lear. Blow, wind, and crack your cheeks¹! rage!
 blow!

You cataracts, and hurricanoes, spout
 Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the cocks!
 You sulphurous and thought-executing² fires,
 Vaunt-couriers³ to oak-cleaving thunderbolts,
 Singe my white head! And thou, all-shaking thunder,
 Strike flat the thick rotundity o' the world!
 Crack nature's moulds, all germens spill at once⁴,
 That make ingrateful man!

Fool. O nuncle, court holy-water⁵ in a dry house

¹ The poet was here thinking of the common representation of the winds in many books of his time. We find the same allusion in Troilus and Cressida. See vol. vii. p. 250.

² Thought-executing, i. e. doing execution with celerity equal to thought.

³ Avant-couriers, Fr. The phrase occurs in other writers of Shakespeare's time. It originally meant the foremost scouts of an army. In The Tempest, "Jove's lightnings" are termed more familiarly—

"The precursors
 O' the dreadful thunder-claps."

⁴ There is a parallel passage in The Winter's Tale:—

"Let nature crush the sides o' the earth together,
 And mar the seeds within."

So again in Macbeth:—

"And the sum
 Of nature's germens tumble all together."

For the force of the word spill, see Genesis, xxxviii. 9.

⁵ Court holy-water, i. e. fair words and flattering speeches. "Gonfiare alcuno," says Florio, "to soothe or flatter one, to set one agogge, or with fair words bring him into a foole's paradise; " is better than this rain-water out o' door. Good nuncle, in, and ask thy daughter's blessing! Here's a night pities neither wise men nor fools.

Lear. Rumble thy bellyful! Spit fire! spout rain! Nor rain, wind, thunder, fire, are my daughters; I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness, I never gave you kingdom, call'd you children, You owe me no subscription⁶; then let fall Your horrible pleasure; here I stand, your slave, A poor, infirm, weak, and despis'd old man: But yet I call you servile ministers, That will with two pernicious daughters join^a Your high engender'd battles, 'gainst a head So old and white as this. O! O! 'tis foul!

Fool. He that has a house to put his head in, has a good head-piece.

The cod-piece that will house,
Before the head has any,
The head and he shall louse;—
So beggars marry many.

The man that makes his toe
What he his heart should make,
Shall of a corn cry woe,
And turn his sleep to wake.

—for there was never yet fair woman, but she made mouths in a glass.

Enter KENT.

Lear. No, I will be the pattern of all patience, I will say nothing.

Kent. Who's there?

fill one with hopes, or court holie-water." It appears to have been borrowed from the French, who have their Eau bénite de la cour in the same sense.

⁶ i. e. submission, obedience. See Act i. Sc. 2, note 6; and vol. vii. p. 254, note 17.

^a The quartos read, have and join'd.

Fool. Marry, here's grace, and a cod-piece⁷; that's a wise man, and a fool.

Kent. Alas, sir, are you here? things that love night, Love not such nights as these; the wrathful skies Gallow⁸ the very wanderers of the dark, And make them keep their caves: Since I was man, Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder, Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard: man's nature cannot carry The affliction, nor the fear.

Lear. Let the great gods, That keep this dreadful pudder⁹ o'er our heads, Find out their enemies now. Tremble, thou wretch, That hast within thee undivulged crimes, Unwhipp'd of justice: Hide thee, thou bloody hand; Thou perjur'd, and thou simular¹⁰ of virtue That art incestuous: Caitiff, to pieces shake, That under covert and convenient seeming Hast practis'd on man's life!—Close pent-up guilts, Rive your concealing continents¹¹, and cry These dreadful summoners grace¹². I am a man, ⁷ Meaning the king and himself. The king's grace was the usual expression in Shakespeare's time.

⁸ To gallow is to frighten, to scare; from the A. S. azælan, or azælpán. In the corrupted form of to gally it is still in use provincially.

⁹ The folio has pudder; one of the quartos powther; the other quarto reads thund'ring.

¹⁰ The quarto has, thou simular man of virtue: simular, i. e. counterfeit; from simulo, Lat.

" My practices so prevail'd,
That I return'd with simular proof enough
To make the noble Leonatus mad."

Cymbeline, Act v. Sc. 5.

The folio omits man.

¹¹ Continent for that which contains or encloses. Thus in Antony and Cleopatra:—

" Heart, once be stronger than thy continent."

The quartos read, concealed centers.

¹² Summoners are officers that summon offenders before a proper tribunal. See Chaucer's Sompnour's Tale. v. 625-670. Thus

More sinn'd against, than sinning¹³.

Kent.

Alack, bare-headed!

Gracious my lord, hard by here is a hovel;
Some friendship will it lend you 'gainst the tempest;
Repose you there: while I to this hard house,
(More hard than is the stone¹⁴ whereof 'tis rais'd;
Which even but now, demanding after you,
Denied me to come in), return, and force
Their scant'd courtesy.

Lear.

My wits begin to turn,—

Come on, my boy: How dost, my boy? Art cold?
I am cold myself.—Where is this straw, my fellow?
The art of our necessities is strange,
That can make vile things precious. Come, your hovel,
Poor fool and knave, I have one part in my heart
That's sorry yet for thee¹⁵.

Fool. He that has and a little tiny wit,—

With heigh, ho, the wind and the rain,—

Must make content with his fortunes fit;

Though the rain it raineth every day¹⁶.

Lear. True, my good boy.—Come, bring us to this hovel. [Exeunt LEAR and KENT.]

Fool. This is a brave night to cool a courtezan¹⁷.

—I'll speak a prophecy ere I go:

When priests are more in word than matter;

in Howard's Defensative against the Poison of supposed Prophecies, 1581:—"They seem to brag most of the strange events which follow for the most part after blazing starres, as if they were the summoners of God to call princes to the seat of judgment."

¹³ Oedipus, in Sophocles, represents himself in the same light. Oedip. Colon. v. 270:—

Τά γ' ἔργα μου

Πεπονθότ' ἐστὶ μᾶλλον ἢ δεδρακότα.

¹⁴ The folio reads, "More harder than the stones."

¹⁵ The quartos read, "That sorrowes yet for thee."

¹⁶ This is an adaptation of the concluding song in Twelfth Night. The quartos omit and in the first line, and have for instead of though in the fourth.

¹⁷ This speech is not in the quartos.

When brewers mar their malt with water ;
 When nobles are their tailors' tutors ;
 No hereticks burn'd, but wenches' suitors :
 When every case in law is right ;
 No squire in debt, nor no poor knight ;
 When slanders do not live in tongues ;
 Nor cutpurses come not to throngs ;
 When usurers tell their gold i' the field ;
 And bawds and whores do churches build :—
 Then shall the realm of Albion
 Come to great confusion¹⁹.
 Then comes the time, who lives to see't,
 That going shall be us'd with feet.
 This prophecy Merlin shall make ; for I live before his time. [Exit.

SCENE III. A Room in Gloster's Castle.

Enter GLOSTER and EDMUND.

Glo. Alack, alack, Edmund, I like not this unnatural dealing : When I desired their leave that I might pity him, they took from me the use of mine own house ; charged me, on pain of their perpetual displeasure, neither to speak of him, entreat for him, nor any way sustain him.

Edm. Most savage, and unnatural !

¹⁹ This was suggested by what is commonly called Chaucer's Prophecy. It is thus quoted by Puttenham, in his Arte of English Poesie, 1589 :—

" When faith fails in priestes saws,
 And lords hests are holden for laws,
 And robbery is tane for purchase,
 And letchery for solace,
 Then shall the realm of Albion
 Be brought to great confusion."

See the Works of Chaucer in Whittingham's edit. vol. v. p. 179.

Glo. Go to ; say you nothing : There is division between the dukes ; and a worse matter than that : I have received a letter this night ;—'tis dangerous to be spoken :—I have locked the letter in my closet . these injuries the king now bears will be revenged home ; there is part of a power already footed¹ : we must incline to the king. I will seek him, and privily relieve him : go you, and maintain talk with the duke, that my charity be not of him perceived : If he ask for me, I am ill, and gone to bed. If I die for it, as no less is threatened me, the king my old master must be relieved. There is some strange thing toward, Edmund : pray you, be careful. [Exit

Edm. This courtesy, forbid thee, shall the duke Instantly know ; and of that letter too :— This seems a fair deserving, and must draw me That which my father loses ; no less than all : The younger rises, when the old doth fall. [Exit.

SCENE IV. A Part of the Heath, with a Hovel.

Enter LEAR, KENT, and Fool.

Kent. Here is the place, my lord ; good my lord, enter :

The tyranny of the open night's too rough
For nature to endure. [Storm still.

Lear. Let me alone.

Kent. Good my lord, enter here.

Lear. Wilt break my heart ?

Kent. I'd rather break mine own : Good my lord, enter.

Lear. Thou think'st 'tis much, that this contentious storm

Invades us to the skin : so 'tis to thee ;

But where the greater malady is fix'd,
 The lesser is scarce felt¹. Thou'dst shun a bear :
 But if thy flight lay toward the raging² sea, Thou'dst meet the bear i' the mouth. When the mind's free,

The body's delicate : the tempest in my mind
 Doth from my senses take all feeling else,
 Save what beats there—Filial ingratitude !
 Is it not as this mouth should tear this hand,
 For lifting food to't ?—But I will punish home :—
 No, I will weep no more.—In such a night
 To shut me out !—Pour on ; I will endure³ :—
 In such a night as this ! O Regan, Goneril !
 Your old kind father, whose frank heart gave all,
 O, that way madness lies ; let me shun that ;
 No more of that,—

Kent. Good my lord, enter here.

Lear. 'Pr'ythee, go in thyself ; seek thine own ease,
 This tempest will not give me leave to ponder
 On things would hurt me more.—But I'll go in :
 In, boy ; go, first.—[To the Fool.] You houseless⁴ poverty,—
 Nay, get thee in. I'll pray, and then I'll sleep.—
 [Fool goes in.]

Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er you are,
 That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm,
 How shall your houseless heads, and unfed sides,

¹ That of two concomitant pains, the greater obscures or relieves the less, is an aphorism of Hippocrates. See Disquisitiones Metaphysicæ and Literary, by F. Sayers, M.D. 1793, p. 68.

“He lesser pangs can bear who hath endur'd the chief.”

Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6.

² The folio, “roaring.”

³ This line is omitted in the quartos.

⁴ This and the next line are only in the folio. They are very judiciously intended to represent that humility, or tenderness, or neglect of forms which affliction forces on the mind.

Your loop'd and window'd raggedness⁵, defend you
 From seasons such as these? O! I have ta'en
 Too little care of this! Take physick, pomp;
 Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel;
 That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
 And show the heavens more just.

Edg. [Within.] Fathom and half, fathom and half!
 Poor Tom⁷!

[The Fool runs out from the Hovel.]

Fool. Come not in here, nuncle, here's a spirit.

Help me, help me!

Kent. Give me thy hand.—Who's there?

Fool. A spirit, a spirit; he says his name's poor Tom.

Kent. What art thou that dost grumble there i' the straw?

Come forth.

Enter EDGAR, disguised as a Madman.

Edg. Away! the foul fiend follows me:—
 Through the sharp hawthorn blows the cold wind.—
 Humph! go to thy cold bed, and warm thee⁸.

Lear. Didst thou give⁹ all to thy two daughters?
 And art thou come to this?

Edg. Who gives any thing to poor Tom? whom the foul fiend hath led through fire and through flame,

⁵ Loop'd and window'd is full of holes and apertures: the allusion is to loop-holes, such as are found in ancient castles, and designed for the admission of light, where windows would have been incommodious. The folio has lopp'd.

⁷ This speech of Edgar's is omitted in the quartos. He gives the sign used by those who are sounding the depth at sea.

⁸ So in the Induction to The Taming of the Shrew, Sly says, "Go to thy cold bed and warm thee;" which is supposed to be in ridicule of The Spanish Tragedy, or some play equally absurd. The word cold is omitted in the folio in this and the preceding line.

⁹ The quartos, "Hast thou given." through ford and whirlpool, o'er bog and quagmire¹⁰, that hath laid knives under his pillow, and halters in his pew; set ratsbane by his porridge; made him proud of heart, to ride on a bay trotting-horse over four-inched bridges, to course his own shadow for a traitor:—Bless thy five wits¹¹! Tom's a-cold.—O, do de, do de, do de.—Bless thee from whirlwinds, star-blasting, and taking¹²! Do poor Tom some charity, whom the foul fiend vexes: There could I have him now,—and there,—and there again, and there. [Storm continues.]

Lear. What! have his daughters brought him to this pass?—

Could'st thou save nothing? Did'st thou give them all?

Fool. Nay, he reserved a blanket, else we had been all ashamed.

¹⁰ Alluding to the ignis fatuus, supposed to be lights kindled by mischievous beings to lead travellers into destruction. He afterwards recounts the temptations by which he was prompted to suicide; the opportunities of destroying himself, which often occurred to him in his melancholy moods. Infernal spirits are always represented as urging the wretched to self-destruction. So in Dr. Faustus, 1604:—

“Swords, poisons, halters, and evenom'd steel,
Are laid before me to despatch myself.”

Shakespeare found this charge against the fiend in Harsnet's Declaration, 1603, before cited.

¹¹ It has been before observed that the wits seem to have been reckoned five by analogy to the five senses. They were sometimes confounded by old writers, as in the instances cited by Percy and Steevens; Shakespeare, however, in his 141st Sonnet, considers them as distinct:—

“But my five wits nor my five senses can Dissuade one foolish heart from serving thee.”

See Much Ado About Nothing, Act i. Sc. 1, note 9.

¹² To take is to blast, or strike with malignant influence. See Merry Wives of Windsor, Act iv. Sc. 4, note 2. See also a former passage:—

“Strike her young bones,
Ye taking airs, with lameness.”

Lear. Now, all the plagues that in the pendulous air Hang fated o'er men's faults¹³, light on thy daughters!

Kent. He hath no daughters, sir.

Lear. Death, traitor! nothing could have subdu'd nature

To such a lowness, but his unkind daughters.—
Is it the fashion, that discarded fathers
Should have thus little mercy on their flesh?
Judicious punishment! 'twas this flesh begot
Those pelican daughters¹⁴.

Edg. Pillicock¹⁵ sat on pillicock's-hill;—
Halloo, halloo, loo, loo!

Fool. This cold night will turn us all to fools and madmen.

Edg. Take heed o' the foul fiend: Obey thy parents; keep thy word justly;¹⁶ swear not; commit not with man's sworn spouse; set not thy sweetheart on proud array: Tom's a-cold.

Lear. What hast thou been?

Edg. A serving-man, proud in heart and mind; that curl'd my hair¹⁷; wore gloves in my cap¹⁸;

¹³ So in Timon of Athens:—

“Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-view'd city hang his poison
In the sick air.”

¹⁴ The young pelican is fabled to suck the mother's blood. The allusions to this fable are very numerous in old writers.

¹⁵ See Act ii. Sc. 3, note 6, p. 381, ante. It should be observed that Killico is one of the devils mentioned in Harsnet's book. The inquisitive reader may find a further explanation of this word in a note to the translation of Rabelais, edit. 1750, vol. i. p. 184. In Minsheu's Dictionary, art. 9299; and Chalmers's Works of Sir David Lindsay, Glossary, v. pillok. See note on Turlygod, Act ii. Sc. 3, p. 409.

¹⁶ The folio, “Keep thy word's justice.”

¹⁷ “Then Ma. Mainy, by the instigation of the first of the seven [spirits], began to set his hands unto his side, curled his hair, and used such gestures as Ma. Edmunds [the exorcist] presently affirmed that that spirit was Pride. Herewith he began to curse and banne, saying, What a poxe do I here? I will stay

Let not the creaking of shoes, nor the rustling of silks, betray thy poor heart to women: Keep thy foot out of brothels, thy hand out of plackets²⁰, thy pen from lenders' books²¹, and defy the foul fiend.

no longer among a company of rascal priests, but go to the court, and brave it amongst my fellows, the noblemen there assembled."——"Shortly after they [the seven spirits] were all cast forth, and in such manner as Ma. Edmunds directed them, which was, that every devil should depart in some certaine forme, representing either a beast or some other creature that had the resemblance of that sinne whereof he was the chief author: whereupon the spirit of Pride departed in the forme of a peacock; the spirit of Sloth in the likeness of an asse; the spirit of Envie in the similitude of a dog; the spirit of Gluttony in the form of a wolfe; and the other devils had also in their departure their particular likenesses agreeable to their natures."—Harsnet's Declaration, &c. 1603. Before each sin was cast out Mainy, by gestures, acted that particular sin; curling his hair, to show pride, &c. &c.

¹⁸ It was anciently the custom to wear gloves in the hat on three distinct occasions, viz. as the favour of a mistress, the memorial of a friend, and as a mark to be challenged by an enemy. Prince Henry boasts that he will pluck a glove from the comonest creature and wear it in his helmet. And Tucca says to Sir Quintilian, in Decker's Satiromastix:—"Thou shalt wear her glove in thy worshipful hat, like to a leather brooch." And Pandora, in Lyly's Woman in the Moon, 1597:—

"He that first presents me with his head Shall wear my glove in favour of the dead."

Portia, in her assumed character, asks Bassanio for his gloves, which she says she will wear for his sake: and King Henry V. gives the pretended glove of Alençon to Fluellen, which afterwards occasions his quarrel with the English soldier.

the purpose of raising money by means of shop goods, or brown paper commodities, they usually entered their promissory notes, or other similar obligations, in books kept for that purpose. In Lodge's Looking Glasse for England, 1598, 4to. a usurer says to a gentleman, "I have thy hand set to my book, that thou received'st forty pounds of me in monie." To which the other answers, "It was your device to colour the statute, but your conscience knows what I had."

²² "Dolphin my boy, my boy,
Cease, let him trot by ;
It seemeth not that such a foe
From me or you would fly."

This is a stanza from a very old ballad, written on some battle fought in France ; during which the king, unwilling to put the suspected valour of his son the Dauphin to the trial, therefore, as different champions cross the field, the king always discovers some objection to his attacking each of them, and repeats the two first lines as every fresh personage is introduced ; and at last assists in propping up a dead body against a tree for him to try his manhood upon. Steevens had this account from an old gentleman, who was only able to report part of the ballad. In Jonson's Bartholomew Fair, Cokes cries out, "God's my life ! He shall be Dauphin, my boy !" Hey nonny nonny is merely the burthen of another old ballad.

²³ The words unbutton here are only in the folio. The quartos read, Come on, be true.

Fool. 'Pr'ythee, nuncle, be contented; this is a naughty²⁴ night to swim in.—Now a little fire in a wild field were like an old lecher's heart; a small spark, all the rest on's body cold.—Look, here comes a walking fire.

Edg. This is the foul fiend Flibbertigibbet²⁵: he begins at curfew, and walks till the first cock; he gives the web and the pin²⁶, squints the eye, and makes

²⁵ The name of this fiend, though so grotesque, was not invented by Shakespeare, but by those who wished to impose upon their hearers the belief of his actual existence: this and most of the fiends mentioned by Edgar being to be found in Bishop Harsnet's book, among those which the Jesuits, about the time of the Spanish invasion, pretended to cast out, for the purpose of making converts. The principal scene of this farce was laid in the family of Mr. Edmund Peckham, a Catholic. Harsnet published his account of the detection of the imposture, by order of the privy council. "Frateretto, Fliberdigibet, Hoberdidance, Tocobatto, were four devils of the round or morrice. . . . These four had forty assistants under them, as themselves doe confesse. Flebergibbe is used by Latimer for a sycophant. And Cotgrave explains Coquette by a Flebergibet or Titifill."

It was an old tradition that spirits were relieved from the confinement in which they were held during the day, at the time of curfew, that is, at the close of the day, and were permitted to wander at large till the first cock-crowing. Hence, in The Tempest, they are said to "rejoice to hear the solemn curfew." See Tempest, Act i. Sc. 2, note 38; and Hamlet, Act i. Sc. 1, and Sc. 5.

²⁶ The pin and web is a disease of the eyes resembling the cataract in an imperfect stage. Acerbi, in his Travels, vol. ii. p. 20, has given the Lapland method of cure. In a fragment of an old medical treatise, it is thus described:—"Another sykenes ther byth of yezen, on a webbe, a nother a wem, that hydyth the myddel of the yezen; & this hes to maners, other whilys he is white & thynne, and other whilys he is thykke, as whenne the obtalmye ne is nocht clene yhelyd up, bote the rote abydyth styll. ²⁷ About St. Withold we have no certainty. This adventure is not found in the common legends of St. Vitalis, whom Mr. Tyrwhitt thought was meant. The wold is a plain and open country ; polð, Saxon : a country without wood, whether hilly or not. It appears to have been pronounced old, or ould, and is sometimes so written. Bullokar calls it a sheep-walk. We have Stow-on-the-Wold in Gloucestershire. The wold also designates a large tract of country on the borders of Bedfordshire and Northamptonshire ; and Cotswold in Gloucestershire. Antiquaries are divided in opinion whether weald is of the same family, as it is said to mean a woody country. "Her nine-fold" seems to be put for the sake of the rhyme, instead of nine foals. For what purpose the incubus is enjoined to plight her troth will appear from a charm against the night-mare in Scot's Discovery of Witchcraft, which occurs, with slight variation, in Beaumont and Fletcher's Monsieur Thomas :—

"S. George, S. George, our ladies knight,
He walk'd by daie, so did he by night,
Until such time as he hir found :
He hir beat, and he hir bound,
Until hir she to him plight,
She would not come to [him] that night."

³¹ In the metrical Romance of Sir Bevis, who was confined seven years in a dungeon, it is said that—

"Rattes and mice, and such smal dere,
Was his meat that seven yere."

³² "The names of other punie spirits cast out of Twyford were these:—Hilco, Smolkin, Hillio," &c.—Harsnet's Detection, &c. p. 49. Again, "Maho was the chief devil that had possession of Sarah Williams; but another of the possessed, named Richard Mainy, was molested by a still more considerable fiend, called Modu," p. 268; where the said Richard Mainy deposes:—"Furthermore it is pretended, that there remaineth still in mee the prince of devils, whose name should be Modu." And, p. 269:—"When the said priests had despatched their business at Hackney (where they had been exorcising Sarah Williams), they then returned towards mee, upon pretence to cast the great prince Modu out of mee."

³³ In the Goblins, by Sir John Suckling, a catch is introduced, which concludes with these two lines:—

"The prince of darkness is a gentleman;

Mahu, Mahu is his name."

This catch may not be the production of Suckling, but the original referred to by Edgar's speech.

And let this tyrannous night take hold upon you,
 Yet have I ventur'd to come seek you out,
 And bring you where both fire and food is ready.

Lear. First let me talk with this philosopher :—
 What is the cause of thunder ?

Kent. Good my lord, take his offer ;
 Go into the house.

Lear. I'll talk a word with this same learned Theban :
 What is your study ?

Edg. How to prevent the fiend, and to kill vermin.

Lear. Let me ask you one word in private.

Kent. Impórtune him once more to go, my lord,
 His wits begin t'unsettle³⁴.

 His daughters seek his death :— Ah, that good Kent !
 He said it would be thus :— Poor banish'd man !—
 Thou say'st, the king grows mad ; I'll tell thee, friend,

 Now outlaw'd from my blood ; he sought my life,
 But lately, very late ; I lov'd him, friend,—
 No father his son dearer : true to tell thee,

[Storm continues.

The grief hath craz'd my wits. What a night's this !
 I do beseech your grace,—

³⁴ Lord Orford has the following remark in the postscript to his Mysterious Mother, which deserves a place here :—“ When Belvidera talks of lutes, laurels, seas of milk, and ships of Amber, she is not mad, but light-headed. When madness has taken possession of a person, such character ceases to be fit for the stage, or at least should appear there but for a short time ; it being the business of the theatre to exhibit passions, not distempers. The finest picture ever drawn of a head discomposed by misfortune is that of King Lear. His thoughts dwell on the ingratitude of his daughters, and every sentence that falls from his wildness excites reflection and pity. Had frenzy entirely seized him, our compassion would abate ; we should conclude that he no longer felt unhappiness. Shakespeare wrote as a philosopher, Otway as a poet.”

Lear. O, cry you mercy,
Noble philosopher, your company.

Edg. Tom's a-cold.

Glo. In, fellow, there, in to th' hovel; keep thee warm.

Lear. Come, let's in all.

Kent. This way, my lord.

Lear. With him;
I will keep still with my philosopher.

Kent. Good my lord, sooth him; let him take the fellow.

Glo. Take him you on.

Kent. Sirrah, come on; go along with us.

Lear. Come, good Athenian.

Glo. No words, no words:
Hush.

Edg. *Child Rowland*³⁵ to the dark tower came,
His word was still,—Fie, foh, and fum,
I smell the blood of a British man.

[Exeunt.]

³⁵ Capel observes that Child Rowland means the Knight Orlando. He would read come, with the quartos absolutely (Orlando being come to the dark tower); and supposes a line to be lost "which spoke of some giant, the inhabitant of that tower, and the smeller-out of Child Rowland, who comes to encounter him." He proposes to fill up the passage thus:—

"Child Rowland to the dark tower come,
[The giant roar'd, and out he ran];
His word was still," &c.

Part of this is to be found in the second part of Jack and the Giants, which, if not as old as the time of Shakespeare, may have been compiled from something that was so: they are uttered by a giant:—

"Fee, faw, fum,
I smell the blood of an Englishman;
Be he alive, or be he dead,
I'll grind his bones to make my bread."

Another version is given by Jamieson in Illustrations of Northern Antiquities, 1814, p. 402.

SCENE V. A Room in Gloster's Castle.Enter CORNWALL and EDMUND.

Corn. I will have my revenge, ere I depart his house.

Edm. How, my lord, I may be censured, that nature thus gives way to loyalty, something fears me to think of.

Corn. I now perceive, it was not altogether your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit¹, set a-work by a reproveable badness in himself.

Edm. How malicious is my fortune, that I must repent to be just! This is the letter he spoke of, which approves him an intelligent party to the advantages of France. O heavens! that this treason were not, or not I the detector!

Corn. Go with me to the duchess.

Edm. If the matter of this paper be certain, you have mighty business in hand.

Corn. True or false, it hath made thee earl of Gloster. Seek out where thy father is, that he may be ready for our apprehension.

Edm. [Aside.] If I find him comforting the king, it will stuff his suspicion more fully.—I will persevere in my course of loyalty, though the conflict be sore between that and my blood.

Corn. I will lay trust upon thee; and thou shalt find a dearer father in my love. [Exeunt.]

¹ Cornwall seems to mean the merit of Edmund; which, being noticed by Gloster, provoked or instigated Edgar to seek his father's death.

SCENE VI. A Chamber in a Farm-House, adjoining the Castle.

Enter GLOSTER and KENT.

Glo. Here is better than the open air; take it thankfully: I will piece out the comfort with what addition I can: I will not be long from you.

Kent. All the power of his wits has given way to his impatience:—The gods reward your kindness!
[Exit GLOSTER.]

Enter LEAR, EDGAR, and Fool.

Edg. Frateretto¹ calls me; and tells me Nero is an angler in the lake of darkness. Pray, innocent², and beware the foul fiend.

Fool. 'Pr'ythee, nuncle, tell me, whether a mad man be a gentleman, or a yeoman?

Lear. A king, a king!

Fool. No; he's a yeoman, that has a gentleman to his son; for he's a mad yeoman, that sees his son a gentleman before him.

Lear. To have a thousand with red burning spits Come hissing³ in upon 'em:—

Edg. The foul fiend bites my back⁴.

¹ See the quotation from Harsnet, in note 25 on the preceding scene. Rabelais says that Nero was a fiddler in hell, and Trajan an angler. The history of Garagantua had appeared in English before 1575, being mentioned in Laneham's Letter from Killingworth, printed in that year.

² Perhaps he is here addressing the Fool. Fools were anciently termed innocents. So in All's Well that Ends Well, Act iv. Sc. 3:—"The sheriff's fool—a dumb innocent, that could not say him nay."

³ The old copies have hizzing, which Malone changed to whizzing. One of the quartos spells the word hizzing, which indicates that the reading of the present text is right.

⁴ This and the next thirteen speeches are only in the quartos.

Fool. He's mad, that trusts in the tameness of a wolf, a horse's heels⁵, a boy's love, or a whore's oath.

Lear. It shall be done, I will arraign them straight:—

Come, sit thou here, most learned justicer⁶:—

[To EDGAR.

Thou, sapient sir, sit here. [To the Fool].—Now, you she foxes!—

Edg. Look, where she stands and glares!—

Wantonest thou eyes at trial, madam⁷?

*Come o'er the bourn*⁸, Bessy, to me:—

Fool. *Her boat hath a leak,
And she must not speak*

Why she dares not come over to thee.

⁵ The old copies read, “a horse's health;” but heels was certainly meant. “Trust not a horse's heels, nor a dog's tooth,” is a proverb in Ray's Collection; which may be traced at least as far back as the time of our Edward II. “Et ideo Babio in comœdiis insinuat dicens;—In fide, dente, pede, mulieris, equi canis est fraus.—Hoc sic vulgariter est dici:—

“Till horsis fote thou never traist,

Till hondis toth, ne woman's faith.”

Forduni Scotichronicon, l. xiv. c. 32.

The proverb in the text is probably from the Italian.

⁶ Justicer, from Justiciarius, was the old term, as we learn from Lambard's Eirenarcha:—“And of this it commeth that M. Fitzherbert (in his Treatise of the Justices of Peace), calleth them justicers (contractly for justiciars), and not justices, as we commonly and not altogether improperly doe name them.” The old copy has justice. But false justicer occurs afterwards.

⁷ In the old copy we have, “Look where he stands and glares, wantest thou eyes,” &c. Theobald altered he to she; and wantonest for wantest is the happy suggestion of Mr. Seward.

⁸ A boorn is a brook or rivulet. At the beginning of A Very Mery and Pythie Comedie, called The Longer Thou Livest The More Fool Thou Art, &c. blk. let. no date:—“Entreth Moros, counterfaiting a vain gesture and foolish countenance, synging the foote of many songs, as fooles were wont;” and among them is this passage:—

“Com over the boorne Bessé,

My litle pretie Besse,

Come over the boorne, Bessé to me.”

Edg. The foul fiend haunts poor Tom in the voice of a nightingale. Hopdance cries in Tom's belly⁹ for two white herring. Croak not, black angel; I have no food for thee.

Kent. How do you, sir? Stand you not so amaz'd: Will you lie down and rest upon the cushions?

Lear. I'll see their trial first:—Bring in the evidence—

Thou robed man of justice, take thy place;

[To EDGAR.

And thou, his yoke-fellow of equity, [To the Fool.

And for one blast of thy minikin¹⁰ mouth,

Thy sheep shall take no harm.

Lear. Arraign her first; 'tis Goneril. I here take

It occurs with some variation in W. Birch's Dialogue between Elizabeth and England. There is peculiar propriety in this address: Bessy and poor Tom usually travelled together, as appears by a passage cited from Dick Whipper's Sessions, 1607, by Malone.—Mad women, who travel about the country, are called in Shropshire Cousin Betties, and elsewhere Mad Bessies.

⁹ Much of this may have been suggested by Harsnet's book. Sarah Williams deposes, "That if at any time she did belch, as often times she did by reason that shee was troubled with a wind in her stomacke, the priests would say at such times, that then the spirit began to rise in her . . . and that the wind was the devil." "And," as she saith, "if they heard any croaking in her belly . . . then they would make a wonderful matter of that."—Hoberdidance is mentioned in a former note. "One time shee remembereth that, shee having the said croaking in her belly, they said it was the devil that was about the bed, that spake with the voice of a toad," p. 194, 195, &c.

¹⁰ Minikin was anciently a term of endearment. Baret, in his Alvearie, interprets feat by "proper, well fashioned, minikin, handsome."

my oath before this honourable assembly, she kick'd the poor king her father.

Fool. Come hither, mistress; Is your name Goneril?

Lear. She cannot deny it.

Fool. Cry you mercy, I took you for a joint-stool¹¹.

Lear. And here's another, whose warp'd looks proclaim

What store her heart is made on.—Stop her there! Arms, arms, sword, fire!—Corruption in the place! False justicer, why hast thou let her 'scape?

Edg. Bless thy five wits!

Kent. O pity!—Sir, where is the patience now, That you so oft have boasted to retain?

Edg. My tears begin to take his part so much, They'll mar my counterfeiting. [Aside.]

Lear. The little dogs and all,

Tray, Blanch, and Sweet-heart, see, they bark at me.

Edg. Tom will throw his head at them:—Avaunt, you curs!

Be thy mouth or black or white,

Tooth that poisons if it bite;

Mastiff, greyhound, mongrel grim,

Hound, or spaniel, brach, or lym¹²;

Or bobtail tike¹³, or trundle-tail;

¹¹ This proverbial expression occurs likewise in Lyly's Mother Bombye, 1594.

¹² I suspect that brach signified a harrier. See vol. iii. p. 120, note 7. A lym or lyme was a blood-hound (see Minsheu's Dict. in voce); sometimes also called a limmer or leamer; from the leam or leash, in which he was held till he was let slip. In the book of Ancient Tenures, by T. B. 1679, the words "canes domini regis lesos," are translated leash hounds, such as draw after hurt deer in a leash or lyam. So Drayton, in The Muses Elysium:—

"My doghook at my belt, to which my lyam's ty'd."

¹³ Tijk is the Northern word for a little worthless dog. Trindle-tails are mentioned in The Booke of Huntynge, &c. blk. let. no date; and in the old comedy of A Woman kill'd with Kindness.

Tom will make them weep and wail :

For, with throwing thus my head,

Dogs leap the hatch, and all are fled.

Do de, de de. Sessa¹⁴. Come, march to wakes and fairs, and market towns :—Poor Tom, thy horn is dry¹⁵.

Lear. Then let them anatomize Regan, see what breeds about her heart : Is there any cause in nature, that makes these hard hearts ?—You, sir, I entertain you for one of my hundred ; only I do not like the fashion of your garments : you will say, they are Persian attire¹⁶ ! but let them be changed. [To EDGAR.

Kent. Now, good my lord, lie here, and rest awhile¹⁷.

Lear. Make no noise, make no noise ; draw the curtains : So, so, so : We'll go to supper i' the morning : So, so, so.

Fool. And I'll go to bed at noon.

Re-enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Come hither, friend : Where is the king my master ?

¹⁴ Sessa ; this word occurs before in the fourth Scene of this Act, p. 411. It is spelled Sessey in both places in the old copy. The same word occurs in the Induction to The Taming of the Shrew, where it is spelled sessa : it appears to have been a corruption of cessez, stop or hold, be quiet, have done.

¹⁵ A horn was usually carried about by every Tom of Bedlam, to receive such drink as the charitable might afford him, with whatever scraps of food they might give him. When, therefore, Edgar says his horn is dry, or empty, he merely means, in the language of the character he assumes, to supplicate that it may be filled with drink. See A Pleasant Dispute between a Coach and a Sedan, 4to. 1636 :—“ I have observed when a coach is appendant but two or three hundred pounds a yeere, marke it, the dogges are as leane as rakes ; you may tell all their ribbes lying be the fire ; and Tom a Bedlam may sooner eate his horne than get it filled with small drinke, and for his old almes of bacon there is no hope in the world.”

¹⁶ Attire is wanting in the folio.

Both welcome and protection. Take up thy master : If thou should'st dally half an hour, his life, With thine, and all that offer to defend him, Stand in assured loss : Take up, take up¹⁸ ; And follow me, that will to some provision Give thee quick conduct.

[Kent. Oppressed nature sleeps¹⁹ :— This rest might yet have balm'd thy broken senses^a, Which, if convenience will not allow, Stand in hard cure.—Come, help to bear thy master ; Thou must not stay behind. [To the Fool.

Glo. Come, come, away.

[Exeunt KENT, GLOSTER, and the Fool, bearing off the King.

Edg. When we our betters see bearing our woes, We scarcely think our miseries our foes. Who alone suffers, suffers most i' the mind ; Leaving free things, and happy shows, behind : But then the mind much sufferance doth o'erskip, ¹⁸ One of the quartos reads, "Take up the king;" the other, "Take up to keep," &c.

¹⁹ "These two concluding speeches, by Kent and Edgar, are restored from the quarto. The soliloquy of Edgar is extremely fine ; and the sentiments of it are drawn equally from nature and the subject. Besides, with regard to the stage, it is absolutely necessary : for as Edgar is not designed, in the constitution of the play, to attend the king to Dover, how absurd would it look for a character of his importance to quit the scene without one word said, or the least intimation what we are to expect from him."—Theobald.

 of Gloster¹.

²⁰ i. e. "the great events that are approaching, the loud tumult of approaching war."

²¹ i. e. betray, discover.

^a The quartos have villain.

Enter Steward.

How now? Where's the king?

Stew. My lord of Gloster hath convey'd him hence:
Some five or six and thirty of his knights,
Hot questrists² after him, met him at gate;
Who with some other of the lord's dependants,
Are gone with him toward Dover; where they boast
To have well armed friends.

Corn. Get horses for your mistress

Gon. Farewell, sweet lord, and sister.

[Exeunt GONERIL and EDMUND.

Corn. Edmund, farewell.—Go seek the traitor
Gloster,

Pinion him like a thief, bring him before us.

[Exeunt other Servants.

Though well we may not pass upon his life
Without the form of justice; yet our power
Shall do a courtesy³ to our wrath, which men May blame, but not control. Who's there? The traitor?

Re-enter Servants, with GLOSTER.

Reg. Ingrateful fox! 'tis he.

Corn. Bind fast his corky⁴ arms.

Steward, speaking immediately after, mentions the old earl by the same title.

² A questrist is one who goes in quest or search of another.

⁴ i. e. dry, wither'd, husky arms. This epithet was perhaps borrowed from Harsnet:—"It would pose all the cunning exorcists that are this day to be found, to teach an old corkie woman

Glo. What mean your graces?—Good my friends, consider

You are my guests : do me no foul play, friends.

Corn. Bind him, I say. [Servants bind him.

Reg. Hard, hard :—O filthy traitor.

Glo. Unmerciful lady as you are, I'm none^a.

Corn. To this chair bind him :—Villain, thou shalt find— [REGAN plucks his Beard.

Glo. By the kind gods, 'tis most ignobly done,
To pluck me by the beard.

Reg. So white, and such a traitor !

Glo. Naughty lady,

These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken⁵, and accuse thee : I am your host ;
With robbers' hands, my hospitable favours⁶

You should not ruffle thus. What will you do ?

Corn. Come, sir, what letters had you late from France ?

Reg. Be simple answer'd, for we know the truth.

Corn. And what confederacy have you with the traitors

Late footed in the kingdom ?

Reg. To whose hands have you sent the lunatick king ?

Speak.

Glo. I have a letter guessingly set down,
Which came from one that's of a neutral heart,
And not from one oppos'd.

Corn. Cunning.

Reg. And false.

Corn. Where hast thou sent the king ?

to writhe, tumble, curvet, and fetch her morice gambols as Martha Bressier did."

^a The quartos read, " I am true."

⁵ i. e. quicken into life.

⁶ Favours mean the same as features ; that is, the different parts of which a face is composed.

Glo.

To Dover.

Reg. Wherefore to Dover? Wast thou not charg'd at peril—

Corn. Wherefore to Dover? Let him answer that.

Glo. I am tied to the stake, and I must stand the course⁷.

Reg. Wherefore to Dover?

Glo. Because I would not see thy cruel nails
Pluck out his poor old eyes; nor thy fierce sister
In his anointed flesh rash⁸ boarish fangs.
The sea, with such a storm as his bare head
In hell-black night endur'd, would have buoy'd up,
And quench'd the stelled⁹ fires: yet, poor old heart,
He help the heavens to rain.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that dearn¹⁰ time,
Thou should'st have said, Good porter, turn the key;
All cruels else subscrib'd¹¹:—But I shall see
The winged vengeance overtake such children.

Corn. See it shalt thou never:—Fellows; hold the chair:

Upon these eyes of thine I'll set my foot¹².

Glo. He, that will think to live till he be old,

⁷ So in Macbeth:—

“They have chain'd me to a stake; I cannot fly,
But, bear-like, I must fight the course.”

⁸ The folio reads, “stick boarish fangs.” To rash is the old hunting term for the stroke made by a wild boar with his fangs.

⁹ i. e. starred.

¹⁰ Thus the quartos. The folio reads, “that sterne time.” Dearn is dreary. The reading of the folio is countenanced by Chapman's version of the 24th Iliad:—

“In this so sterne a time
Of night and danger.”

¹¹ i. e. yielded, submitted to the necessity of the occasion.

¹² This horrible exhibition is not more sanguinary than that of some contemporary dramas. In Selimus, Emperor of the Turks, one of the sons of Bajazet, pulls out the eyes of an Aga on the stage, and says:—

“Yes, thou shalt live, but never see that day,

Give me some help :—O cruel ! O ye gods !

Reg. One side will mock another ; the other too.

Corn. If you see vengeance,—

Serv. Hold your hand, my lord :

I have serv'd you ever since I was a child ;

But better service have I never done you,

Than now to bid you hold.

Reg. How now, you dog ?

Serv. If you did wear a beard upon your chin,
I'd shake it on this quarrel ; What do you mean ?

Corn. My villain¹³ ! [Draws, and runs at him.]

Serv. Nay, then come on, and take the chance of anger.

[Draws. They fight. CORN. is wounded.]

Reg. Give me thy sword.— [To another Serv.]

A peasant stand up thus !

Serv. O, I am slain !—My lord, you have one eye left
To see some mischief on him :—O ! [Dies.]

Corn. Lest it see more, prevent it :—Out, vile jelly !
Where is thy lustre now ?

Glo. All dark and comfortless.—Where's my son
Edmund ?

Edmund, enkindle all the sparks of nature,
To quit¹⁴ this horrid act.

Reg. Out, treacherous villain !

Thou call'st on him that hates thee : it was he
That made the overture¹⁵ of thy treasons to us ;
Who is too good to pity thee.

Wanting the tapers that should give thee light.

[Pulls out his eyes."]

Immediately after his hands are cut off on the stage. In Marston's Antonio's Revenge, 1602, Piero's tongue is torn out on the stage.

¹³ Villain is here used in its original sense, of one in servitude.

¹⁴ i. e. requite.

¹⁵ Overture here means an opening, a discovery. "It was he who first laid the treasons open to us."

Glo.

O my follies !

Then Edgar was abus'd.—

Kind gods, forgive me that, and prosper him !

Reg. Go, thrust him out at gates, and let him smell
His way to Dover.—How is't, my lord ? How look you ?Corn. I have receiv'd a hurt :—Follow me, lady.—
Turn out that eyeless villain ;—throw this slave
Upon the dunghill.—Regan, I bleed apace :
Untimely comes this hurt : Give me your arm.[Exit CORNWALL, led by REGAN ;—Servants unbind GLOSTER, and lead him out.]1 Serv. [I'll never care what wickedness I do¹⁶,
If this man come to good.2 Serv. If she live long,
And, in the end, meet the old course of death¹⁷,
Women will all turn monsters.1 Serv. Let's follow the old earl, and get the Bedlam
To lead him where he would ; his roguish madness Allows itself to any thing.2 Serv. Go thou ; I'll fetch some flax, and whites of eggs¹⁸,
To apply to his bleeding face. Now, heaven help him !] [Exeunt severally.]¹⁶ This short dialogue is only found in the quartos. It is, as Theobald observes, full of nature. Servants could hardly see such barbarity committed without pity ; and the vengeance that they presume must overtake the actors of it, is a sentiment and doctrine well worthy of the stage and of the great moral poet.¹⁷ i. e. *die a natural death.*¹⁸ Steevens asserted that this passage was ridiculed by Ben Jonson in The Case is Altered. Mr. Gifford has shown the folly and falsehood of the assertion ; and that it was only a common allusion to a method of stanching blood practised in the poet's time by every barber-surgeon and old woman in the kingdom.

ACT IV.

SCENE I. The Heath.Enter EDGAR.Edgar.

YET better thus, and known¹ to be contemn'd,
Than still contemn'd and flatter'd. To be worst,

The lowest, and most dejected thing of fortune,
Stands still in esperance, lives not in fear:
The lamentable change is from the best;
The worst returns to laughter. Welcome then²,
Thou unsubstantial air, that I embrace!
The wretch, that thou hast blown unto the worst,
Owes nothing to thy blasts.—But who comes here?—

Enter GLOSTER, led by an old Man.

My father, poorly led?—World, world, O world!
But that thy strange mutations make us hate thee,
Life would not yield to age³.

Old Man. O my good lord, I have been your tenant, and your father's tenant, these fourscore years.

Glo. Away, get thee away; good friend, be gone:
Thy comforts can do me no good at all,

¹ I once thought we should read unknown; but Edgar's reasoning seems to be, "It is better to be thus, and know that one is contemned, than in a condition where, though openly flattered, one is still secretly contemned."

² The next two lines and a half are not in the quartos.

³ "O world! if reverses of fortune and changes such as I now see and feel, from ease and affluence to poverty and misery, did not show us the little value of life, we should never submit with any kind of resignation to death, the necessary consequences of old age; we should cling to life more strongly than we do."

Thee they may hurt.

Old Man. Alack, sir, you cannot see your way.

Glo. I have no way, and therefore want no eyes ;
I stumbled when I saw : Full oft 'tis seen,
Our needs secure us⁴, and our mere defects
Prove our commodities.—Ah, dear son Edgar,
The food of thy abused father's wrath !
Might I but live to see thee in my touch⁵,
I'd say, I had eyes again !

Old Man. How now ? Who's there ?

Edg. [Aside.] O gods ! Who is't can say, I am at the worst ?

I am worse than e'er I was.

Old Man. 'Tis poor mad Tom.

Edg. [Aside.] And worse I may be yet ; The worst is not,

So long as we can say, *This is the worst*⁶.

Old Man. Fellow, where goest ?

Glo. Is it a beggar man ?

Old Man. Madman and beggar too.

Glo. He has some reason, else he could not beg.

I the last night's storm I such a fellow saw ;
Which made me think a man a worm : My son
Came then into my mind ; and yet my mind
Was then scarce friends with him : I have heard more since :

As flies to wanton boys, are we to the gods ;
They kill us for their sport⁷.

⁴ The old copy has, "Our meanes," possibly a typographical error for needes : the words being easily confounded in old MSS. The context shows that needes was probably what the poet wrote.

⁵ So in another scene, "I see it feelingly."

⁶ i. e. while we live ; for while we yet continue to have a sense of feeling, something worse than the present may still happen. He recalls his former rash conclusion.

⁷ "Dii nos quasi pilas homines habent."

Plaut. Captiv. Prol. i. 22.

Thus also in Sidney's Arcadia, lib. ii.—

Edg. How should this be?—
Bad is the trade that must play fool to sorrow, Ang'ring itself and others. [Aside.]—Bless thee, master!

Glo. Is that the naked fellow?

Old Man. Ay, my lord.

Glo. Then, 'pr'ythee, get thee gone⁸: If, for my sake,
Thou wilt o'ertake us, hence a mile or twain,
I' the way to Dover, do it for ancient love;
And bring some covering for this naked soul,
Whom I'll entreat to lead me.

Old Man. Alack, sir! he is mad.

Glo. 'Tis the time's plague, when madmen lead the blind.

Do as I bid thee, or rather do thy pleasure:
Above the rest, be gone.

Old Man. I'll bring him the best 'parel that I have,
Come on't what will. [Exit.]

Glo. Sirrah, naked fellow.

Edg. Poor Tom's a-cold.—I cannot daub⁹ it further. [Aside.]

Glo. Come hither, fellow.

Edg. [Aside.] And yet I must.—Bless thy sweet eyes, they bleed.

Glo. Know'st thou the way to Dover?

Edg. Both stile and gate, horse-way, and foot-path.
Poor Tom hath been scared out of his good wits:
Bless thee, good man's son¹⁰, from the foul fiend!

“Wretched human kinde

Balles to the starres,” &c.

⁸ The folio reads “Get thee away,” leaving the metre defective.

⁹ i. e. disguise it.

“So smooth he daub'd his vice with show of virtue.”

King Richard III.

¹⁰ The quarto has, “Bless the good man.”

[Five fiends¹¹ have been in poor Tom at once; of lust, as Obidicut; Hobbididance, prince of dumbness; Mahu, of stealing; Modo, of murder; Flibbertigibbet, of mopping and mowing; who since possesses chambermaids and waitingwomen¹². So, bless thee, master!]

Glo. Here, take this purse, thou whom the heaven's plagues

Have humbled to all strokes: that I am wretched, Makes thee the happier:—Heavens, deal so still!
 Let the superfluous, and lust-dieted man,
 That braves your ordinance¹³, that will not see
 Because he doth not feel, feel your power quickly;
 So distribution should undo excess,
 And each man have enough.—Dost thou know Dover?

Edg. Ay, master.

Glo. There is a cliff, whose high and bending head
 Looks fearfully in¹⁴ the confined deep:

¹¹ “The devil in Ma. Mainy confessed his name to be Modu, and that he had besides himself seven other spirits, and all of them captains and of great fame. Then Edmundes (the exorcist) began againe with great earnestness, and all the company cried out, &c.—so as both that wicked prince Modu and his company might be cast out.”—Harsnet, p. 163. This passage will account for “five fiends having been in poor Tom at once.”

¹² “If she have a little helpe of the mother, epilepsie, or cramp, to teach her role her eyes, wrie her mouth, gnash her teeth, starte with her body, hold her armes and handes stiffe, make antike faces, grinne, mow and mop like an ape, then no doubt the young girle is owle-blasted, and possessed.”—Harsnet, p. 136. The five devils here mentioned are the names of five of those who were made to act in this farce three chambermaids, or waiting women, in Mr. Edmund Peckham's family. The reader will now perceive why a coquette is called “flebergibbit or titifill” by Cotgrave. See Act iii. Sc. 4, note 25. The passage in crotchets is omitted in the folio.

¹³ The old copy reads, “That slaves your ordinance.” The emendation is by Warburton, and is fully sustained by the reading of the quartos, “That stands your ordinance,” i. e. withstands it.

¹⁴ In is here put for on, as in other places of these plays.

Bring me but to the very brim of it,
 And I'll repair the misery thou dost bear,
 With something rich about me: from that place
 I shall no leading need.

Edg. Give me thy arm;
 Poor Tom shall lead thee. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. Before the DUKE of ALBANY'S Palace

Enter GONERIL and EDMUND; Steward meeting them.

Gon. Welcome, my lord: I marvel, our mild husband¹

Not met us on the way:—Now, where's your master?

Stew. Madam, within; but never man so chang'd:
 I told him of the army that was landed;
 He smil'd at it: I told him, you were coming;
 His answer was, The worse: of Gloster's treachery,
 And of the loyal service of his son,
 When I inform'd him, then he call'd me sot;
 And told me, I had turn'd the wrong side out:—
 What most he should dislike, seems pleasant to him;
 What like, offensive.

Gon. Then shall you go no further. [To EDMUND.

It is the cowish terror of his spirit,
 That dares not undertake: he'll not feel wrongs,
 Which tie him to an answer: Our wishes, on the way,
 May prove effects². Back, Edmund, to my brother;
 Hasten his musters, and conduct his powers:

¹ It must be remembered that Albany, the husband of Goneril, disliked the scheme of oppression and ingratitude at the end of the first act.

² i. e. "The wishes which we expressed to each other on the way hither, may be completed, may take effect." Perhaps alluding to the destruction of her husband."

I must change arms³ at home, and give the distaff
 Into my husband's hands. This trusty servant
 Shall pass between us: ere long you are like to hear,
 If you dare venture in your own behalf,
 A mistress's command. Wear this; spare speech;

[Giving a Favour.]

Decline your head: this kiss, if it durst speak,
 Would stretch thy spirits up into the air⁴;
 Conceive, and fare thee well.

Edm. Yours in the ranks of death.

Gon. My most dear Gloster!

[Exit EDMUND.]

O, the difference of man, and man!
 To thee a woman's services are due;
 My fool usurps my body⁵.

Stew. Madam, here comes my lord.

[Exit Steward.]

Enter ALBANY.

Gon. I have been worth the whistle⁶.

Alb. O Goneril.

You are not worth the dust which the rude wind
 Blows in your face—[I fear your disposition⁷:
 That nature, which contemns its origin,

³ The folio prints erroneously names.

⁴ She bids him decline his head, that she might give him a kiss (the steward being present), and that might appear only to him as a whisper.

⁵ Quarto A reads, "my foot usurp my body." Quarto B, "my foot usurps my head." Quarto C, "a fool usurps my bed." The folio reads, "my fool usurps my body."

⁶ Alluding to the proverb, "It is a poor dog that is not worth the whistling." Goneril's meaning seems to be, "There was a time when you would have thought me worth the calling to you," reproaching him for not having summoned her to consult with on the present occasion.

⁷ These words, and the following passages in brackets are not in the folio. They are necessary to explain the reasons of the detestation which Albany here expresses to his wife.

Cannot be border'd certain in itself ;
 She that herself will sliver⁸ and disbranch
 From her material sap⁹, perforce must wither,
 And come to deadly use¹⁰.

Gon. No more : the text is foolish.

Alb. Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile :
 Filths savour but themselves. What have you done ?
 Tigers, not daughters, what have you perform'd ?
 A father, and a gracious aged man,
 Whose reverence the head-lugg'd bear would lick,
 Most barbarous, most degenerate ! have you madded.
 Could my good brother suffer you to do it ?
 A man, a prince, by him so benefited ?
 If that the heavens do not their visible spirits
 Send quickly down to tame these vile offences,
 It will come,
 Humanity^a must perforce prey on itself,
 Like monsters of the deep.]

Gon. Milk-liver'd man !
 That bear'st a cheek for blows, a head for wrongs
 Who hast not in thy brows an eye discerning
 Thine honour from thy suffering ; [that not know'st,

⁸ So in Macbeth :—

“Slips of yew

Sliver'd in the moon's eclipse.”

See vol. ix. p. 76, note 8.

⁹ “She who breaks the bonds of filial duty, and becomes wholly alienated from her father, must wither and perish, like a branch separated from that trunk or body which supplied it with sap.” There is a peculiar propriety in the use of the word material materia, Lat. signifying the trunk or body of the tree.

¹⁰ Alluding to the use that witches and enchanters are said to make of withered branches in their charms. “A fine insinuation in the speaker, that she was ready for the most unnatural mischief, and a preparative of the poet to her plotting with the bastard against her husband's life.”—Warburton. Dr. Warburton might have adduced the passage from Macbeth above quoted in support of his ingenious interpretation.

^a The quartos misprint Humanly.

Fools do those villains pity, who are punish'd Ere they have done their mischief¹¹. Where's thy drum ?

France spreads his banners in our noiseless land ;
With plumed helm thy slayer begins threats ;
Whilst thou, a moral fool, sit'st still, and cry'st,
Alack! why does he so?]

Alb. See thyself, devil !

Proper deformity seems not in the fiend
So horrid, as in woman¹².

Gon. O vain fool !

[Alb. Thou changed and false-cover'd¹³ thing, for shame,

Be-monster not thy feature¹⁴. Were't my fitness
To let these hands obey my blood¹⁵,
They are apt enough to dislocate and tear
Thy flesh and bones ;—Howe'er thou art a fiend,
A woman's shape doth shield thee.

Gon. Marry, your manhood now !—

¹¹ Goneril means to say that "none but fools would be excited to commiserate those who are prevented from executing their malicious designs, and punished for their evil intention." Malone doubts whether Goneril alludes to her father, but surely there cannot be a doubt that she does, and to the pity for his sufferings expressed by Albany, whom she means indirectly to call a fool for expressing it.

¹² That is, "Diabolic qualities appear not so horrid in the devil, to whom they belong, as in woman, who unnaturally assumes them."

¹³ The old copies read, "Thou changed and felfe-couer'd thing," of which no sense can be made. It is evidently a misprint for falfe-couer'd. What follows clearly shows this:—

"Howe'er thou art a fiend,
A woman's shape doth shield thee."

¹⁴ It has been already observed that feature was often used for form or person in general, the figure of the whole body. See Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act ii. Sc. 4, note 5.

¹⁵ My blood is my passion, my inclination.

Enter a Messenger.

Alb. What news?]¹⁶

Mess. O, my good lord! the Duke of Cornwall's dead;

Slain by his servant, going to put out
The other eye of Gloster.

Alb. Gloster's eyes!

Mess. A servant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great master; who, thereat enrag'd,
Flew on him, and amongst them fell'd him dead:
But not without that harmful stroke, which since
Hath pluck'd him after.

Alb. This shows you are above,
You justicers, that these our nether crimes
So speedily can venge!—But, O poor Gloster!
Lost he his other eye?

Mess. Both, both, my lord.—
This letter, madam, craves a speedy answer;
'Tis from your sister.

Gon. [Aside.] One way I like this well¹⁷.
But being widow, and my Gloster with her,
May all the building in my fancy pluck
Upon my hateful life: Another way,
The news is not so tart.—I'll read and answer. [Exit.

Alb. Where was his son, when they did take his eyes?

Mess. Come with my lady hither.

Alb. He is not here.

Mess. No, my good lord; I met him back again.

Alb. Knows he the wickedness?

¹⁶ The passages in brackets are only in the quartos.

¹⁷ Goneril's plan was to poison her sister, to marry Edmund, to murder Albany, and to get possession of the whole kingdom. As the death of Cornwall facilitated the last part of her scheme, she was pleased at it; but disliked it, as it put it in the power of her sister to marry Edmund.

Mess. Ay, my good lord; 'twas he inform'd against him;

And quit the house on purpose, that their punishment
Might have the freer course.

Alb. Gloster, I live
To thank thee for the love thou show'dst the king,
And to revenge thine eyes.—Come hither, friend;
Tell me what more thou knowest. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE III¹. The French Camp near Dover.

*Enter KENT, and a Gentleman*².

Kent. Why the King of France is so suddenly gone back know you the reason³?

Gent. Something he left imperfect in the state, which since his coming forth is thought of; which imports to the kingdom so much fear and danger, that his personal return was most required, and necessary.

¹ This scene is left out in the folio copy, but is necessary to continue the story of Cordelia, whose behaviour is most beautifully painted.

² The gentleman whom he sent in the foregoing act with letters to Cordelia.

³ "The king of France being no longer a necessary personage, it was fit that some pretext for getting rid of him should be formed before the play was too near advanced towards a conclusion. Decency required that a monarch should not be silently shuffled into the pack of insignificant characters; and therefore his dismissal (which could be effected only by a sudden recall to his own dominions) was to be accounted for before the audience. For this purpose, among others, the present scene was introduced. It is difficult to say what use could have been made of the king, had he appeared at the head of his own armament, and survived the murder of his queen. His conjugal concern on the occasion might have weakened the effect of Lear's paternal sorrow; and being an object of respect as well as pity, he would naturally have divided the spectator's attention, and thereby diminished the consequence of Albany, Edgar, and Kent, whose exemplary virtues deserved to be ultimately placed in the most conspicuous point of view."—Stevens.

Kent. Who hath he left behind him general?

Gent. The Mareschal of France, Monsieur le Fer.

Kent. Did your letters pierce the queen to any demonstration of grief?

Gent. Ay, sir⁴; she took them. read them in my presence;

And now and then an ample tear trill'd down
Her delicate cheek: it seem'd, she was a queen
Over her passion; who, most rebel-like,
Sought to be king o'er her.

Kent. O, then it mov'd her.

Gent. Not to a rage: patience and sorrow strove⁵
Who should express her goodliest. You have seen
Sunshine and rain at once; her smiles and tears
Were like;—a better way⁶. Those happy smilets,
That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know
What guests were in her eyes; which parted thence,
As pearls from diamonds dropp'd^a.—In brief, sorrow

⁴ The old copy reads, "I say." Theobald made the correction.

⁵ The old copy has "streme;" evidently an error.

⁶ Both the quartos read, "were like a better way." Steevens reads, upon the suggestion of Theobald, "a better day," with a long and somewhat ingenious, though unsatisfactory argument in defence of it. Warburton reads, "a wetter May," which is plausible enough. Malone adopts part of his emendation, and reads, "a better May." I follow the reading of the old copies, with a different punctuation. Cordelia's smiles and tears were like the conjunction of sunshine and rain, in a better way or manner, i. e. exceeded that phenomenon in amenity:—

"In brief, sorrow

Would be a rarity most belov'd, if all
Could so become it."

^a There are passages in which the same simile occurs in Sidney's Arcadia, ed. 1593, pp. 168 and 244, and in "A Courtlie Controversie of Cupid's Cautels," 1578, p. 289. A similar beautiful thought in Middleton's Game of Chess has caught the eye of Milton:—

"The holy dew lies like a pearl
Dropt from the opening eyelids of the morn
Upon the bashful rose."

Would be a rarity most belov'd, if all
 Could so become it.

Kent. Made she no verbal question?

Gent. 'Faith, once, or twice, she heav'd the name of father

Pantingly forth, as if it press'd her heart ;

Cried, Sisters ! sisters !—Shame of ladies ! sisters !

Kent ! father ! sisters ! What ? i' the storm ? i' the night ?

*Let pity not be believed*⁷ !—There she shook

The holy water from her heavenly eyes,

And clamour moisten'd⁸ : then away she started

To deal with grief alone.

Kent. It is the stars,

The stars above us, govern our conditions⁹ ;

Else one self mate and mate could not beget

Such different issues. You spoke not with her since ?

Gent. No.

Kent. Was this before the king return'd ?

Gent. No, since.

Kent. Well, sir ; The poor distressed Lear's i' the town :

Who sometime, in his better tune, remembers

What we are come about, and by no means

Will yield to see his daughter.

Gent. Why, good sir ?

Kent. A sovereign shame so elbows him : his own unkindness,

That stripp'd her from his benediction, turn'd her

⁷ i. e. let not pity be supposed to exist. "It is not impossible but Shakespeare might have formed this fine picture of Cordelia's agony from holy writ, in the conduct of Joseph, who, being no longer able to restrain the vehemence of his affection, commanded all his retinue from his presence ; and then wep't aloud, and discovered himself to his brethren."—Theobald.

⁸ i. e. And moisten'd the exclamations with tears. The quartos have erroneously, "and clamour moisten'd her."

⁹ Conditions are dispositions.

To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights
 To his dog-hearted daughters,—these things sting
 His mind so venomously, that burning shame
 Detains him from Cordelia.

Gent. Alack, poor gentleman!

Kent. Of Albany's and Cornwall's powers you heard not!

Gent. 'Tis so, they are afoot.

Kent. Well, sir, I'll bring you to our master Lear,
 And leave you to attend him: some dear cause¹⁰
 Will in concealment wrap me up awhile;
 When I am known aright, you shall not grieve
 Lending me this acquaintance. I pray you, go Along with me.] [Exeunt

SCENE IV. The same. A Tent.

Enter CORDELIA, Physician, and Soldiers.

Cor. Alack, 'tis he; why, he was met even now
 As mad as the vex'd sea: singing aloud;
 Crown'd with rank fumiter¹, and furrow weeds,
 With harlocks², hemlock, nettles, cuckoo-flowers,
 Darnel³, and all the idle weeds that grow
 In our sustaining corn.—A century send forth;
 Search every acre in the high grown field,
 And bring him to our eye. [Exit an Officer.]

¹⁰ i. e. important business.

¹ i. e. fumitory, written by the old herbalists fumittery. Mr. Boucher suggests that furrow should be farrow, fær, empty.

² The quartos read hardocks, the folio hardokes. Drayton mentions harlocks in one of his Eclogues:—

“The honey-suckle, the harlocke,
 The lily, and the lady-smocke,” &c.

Perhaps the charlock, sinapis arvensis, or wild mustard, may be meant.

³ Darnel, according to Gerard, is the most hurtful of weeds among corn.

What can man's wisdom,
In the restoring his bereaved sense?
He, that helps him, take all my outward worth.

Phy. There is means, madam :
Our foster-nurse of nature is repose,
The which he lacks ; that to provoke in him,
Are many simples operative, whose power
Will close the eye of anguish.

Cor. All bless'd secrets,
All you unublish'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears ! be aidant, and remediate,
In the good man's distress⁴ !—Seek, seek for him ;
Lest his ungovern'd rage dissolve the life
That wants the means to lead it⁵.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. News, madam ;
The British powers are marching hitherward.

Cor. 'Tis known before ; our preparation stands
In expectation of them.—O dear father,
It is thy business that I go about ;
Therefore great France
My mourning, and important⁶ tears, hath pitied.
No blown⁷ ambition doth our arms incite,
But love, dear love, and our ag'd father's right :
Soon may I hear, and see him. [Exeunt.

⁴ The folio has desires, instead of distress.

⁵ i. e. the reason which should guide it.

⁶ Important for importunate, as in other places of these plays.
See Comedy of Errors, Act v. Sc. 1. The folio reads importuned.

⁷ i. e. No inflated, no swelling pride.

“Quam bene te ambitio mersit vanissima, ventus,
Et tumidos tumidæ vos superastis aquæ.”

Beza on the Spanish Armada.

So in The Little French Lawyer of Beaumont and Fletcher:—

“I come with no blown spirit to abuse you.”

SCENE V. A Room in Gloster's Castle.Enter REGAN and Steward.Reg. But are my brother's powers set forth?Stew. Ay, madam.Reg. Himself

In person there?

Stew. Madam, with much ado:

Your sister is the better soldier.

Reg. Lord Edmund spake not with your lord at home?Stew. No, madam.Reg. What might import my sister's letter to him?Stew. I know not, lady.Reg. 'Faith, he is posted hence on serious matter.

It was great ignorance, Gloster's eyes being out,
 To let him live; where he arrives, he moves
 All hearts against us: Edmund, I think, is gone,
 In pity of his misery, to despatch
 His nighted life; moreover, to descry
 The strength o' the enemy.

Stew. I must needs after him, madam, with my letter.Reg. Our troops set forth to-morrow; stay with us;
 The ways are dangerous.Stew. I may not, madam;

My lady charg'd my duty in this business.

Reg. Why should she write to Edmund? Might not you

Transport her purposes by word? Belike,
 Something—I know not what:—I'll love thee much,
 Let me unseal the letter.

Stew. Madam, I had rather—Reg. I know, your lady does not love her husband;
 I am sure of that: and, at her late being here,

She gave strange œiliads¹, and most speaking looks
To noble Edmund: I know, you are of her bosom.

Stew. I, madam?

Reg. I speak in understanding; you are, I know it:
Therefore, I do advise you, take this note:
My lord is dead; Edmund and I have talk'd;
And more convenient is he for my hand,
Than for your lady's:—You may gather more².
If you do find him, pray you, give him this³;
And when your mistress hears thus much from you,
I pray, desire her call her wisdom to her.
So, fare you well.

If you do chance to hear of that blind traitor,
Preferment falls on him that cuts him off.

Stew. 'Would I could meet him, madam! I would show

What party I do follow.

Reg. Fare thee well. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI^a. The Country near Dover.

Enter GLOSTER, and EDGAR, dressed like a Peasant.

Glo. When shall I come to the top of that same hill?

Edg. You do climb up it now: look, how we labour.

Glo. Methinks the ground is even.

Edg. Horrible steep:

Hark, do you hear the sea?

Glo. No, truly^b.

¹ Œillade, Fr. a cast, or significant glance of the eye.

² i. e. You may infer more than I have directly told you.

³ Perhaps a ring, or some token, is given to the steward by Regan to be conveyed to Edmund.

^a This scene, and the stratagem by which Gloster is cured of his desperation, are wholly borrowed from Sidney's Arcadia, book ii.

^b Something to complete the measure seems wanting in this or the foregoing hemistich. The quartos read as one line:—

“Horrible steep: hark, do you hear the sea?”

Edg. Why, then your other senses grow imperfect
By your eyes' anguish.

Glo. So may it be, indeed :
Methinks, thy voice is alter'd³ ; and thou speak'st
In better phrase, and matter, than thou didst.

Edg. Y'are much deceiv'd ; in nothing am I chang'd,
But in my garments.

Glo. Methinks, y'are better spoken.

Edg. Come on, sir ; here's the place :—stand still.
—How fearful

And dizzy 'tis, to cast one's eyes so low !
The crows, and choughs, that wing the midway air,
Show scarce so gross as beetles : Half way down
Hangs one that gathers samphire⁴ ; dreadful trade !
Methinks, he seems no bigger than his head :
The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice ; and yond' tall anchoring bark,
Diminish'd to her cock⁵ ; her cock, a buoy
Almost too small for sight : The murmuring surge,
That on the unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,
Cannot be heard so high ;—I'll look no more ;
Lest my brain turn, and the deficient sight
Topple⁶ down headlong.

³ Edgar alters his voice in order to pass afterwards for a malignant spirit.

⁴ “ Samphire grows in great plenty on most of the sea-cliffs in this country : it is terrible to see how people gather it, hanging by a rope several fathom from the top of the impending rocks, as it were in the air.”—Smith's History of Waterford, p. 315, edit. 1774. Dover Cliff was particularly resorted to for this plant, according to Drayton, Polyolbion, b. xviii.—

“ Rob Dover's neighbouring cleeves of samphire, to excite
His dull and sickly taste, and stir up appetite.”

It is still eaten as a pickle in those parts of England bordering on the southern coast.

⁵ i. e. her cock-boat. Hence the term cock-swain.

⁶ To topple is to tumble : the word is again used in Macbeth.

Glo. Set me where you stand.

Edg. Give me your hand : You are now within a foot

Of the extreme verge : for all beneath the moon
Would I not leap upright.

Glo. Let go my hand.

Here, friend, is another purse ; in it a jewel
Well worth a poor man's taking : Fairies, and gods,
Prosper it with thee ! Go thou further off ;
Bid me farewell, and let me hear thee going.

Edg. Now fare you well, good sir. [Seems to go.]

Glo. With all my heart.

Edg. Why I do trifle thus with his despair,
Is done to cure it.

Glo. O you mighty gods !

This world I do renounce ; and, in your sights,
Shake patiently my great affliction off :
If I could bear it longer, and not fall
To quarrel with your great opposeless wills,
My snuff, and loathed part of nature, should Burn itself out. If Edgar live, O bless him !—
Now, fellow, fare thee well.

Edg. Gone, sir : farewell.—

[GLOSTER leaps, and falls along.]

And yet I know not how conceit may rob
The treasury of life, when life itself
Yields to the theft⁷ : Had he been where he thought,
By this, had thought been past.—Alive, or dead ?
Ho, you sir ! friend !—Hear you, sir ?—speak !
Thus might he pass indeed⁸ :—Yet he revives :
What are you, sir ?

So in Nashe's Lenten Stuffe, 1599 :—"Fifty people toppled up their heels there."

⁷ That is, when life is willing to be destroyea.

⁸ i. e. Thus might he die in reality. We still use the word passing bell. So in King Henry VI. Part II.—

"Disturb him not, let him pass peaceably."

Glo. Away, and let me die.

Edg. Had'st thou been ought but gossamer⁹, feathers, air,

So many fathom down precipitating,
Thou'dst shiver'd like an egg: but thou dost breathe;
Hast heavy substance; bleed'st not; speak'st; art sound.
Ten masts at eche¹⁰ make not the altitude,
Which thou hast perpendicularly fell;
Thy life's a miracle: Speak yet again.

Glo. But have I fallen, or no?

Edg. From the dread summit of this chalky bourn¹¹:
Look up a-height;—the shrill-gorg'd lark so far

⁹ “The substance called gossamer is formed of the collected webs of flying spiders, and during calm weather in autumn sometimes fall in amazing quantities.”—Holt White. Some think it the down of plants; others the vapour arising from boggy or marshy ground in warm weather. The etymon of this word, which has puzzled the lexicographers, is said to be summer goose or summer gauze, hence “gauze o' the summer,” its well known name in the north. See Horæ Momentæ Cravenæ, or the Craven Dialect Exemplified, 1824, 8vo. p. 79.

¹⁰ i. e. drawn out at length, or each added to the other. “Eche, exp. draw out, ab A. S. elcan, elcian, Diferre, vel à verb. to eak.”—Skinner, Etymolog. Skinner is right in his last derivation, it is from the A. S. eacan, to add. Thus Chaucer, in The House of Fame, b. iii. v. 975:—

“Gan somewhat to eche
To this tiding in his speche.”

And in Troilus and Cresseide, b. i. v. 706:—

“As doen these fooles, that hir sorrowes eche.”

Pope changed this to attacht; Johnson would read on end; Steevens proposes at reach. Ignorance of our earlier language has been the stumbling-block of all these eminent critics. But Shakespeare himself affords examples in point:—

“’Tis to peize the time,

To eche it and to draw it out in length.”

Merchant of Venice, 4to. 1600.

And Pericles, Act iii. Gower's Prologue:—

“With your fine fancies quaintly eche

What's dumb in show.”

So in King Henry V. Chorus, 1st folio:—

“And eche out our performance with your mind.”

¹¹ i. e. this chalky boundary of England.

Cannot be seen or heard : do but look up.

Glo. Alack, I have no eyes.—

Is wretchedness depriv'd that benefit,
To end itself by death? 'Twas yet some comfort,
When misery could beguile the tyrant's rage,
And frustrate his proud will.

Edg.

Give me your arm :

Up:—So; How is't? Feel you your legs? You stand.

Glo. Too well, too well.

Edg.

This is above all strangeness,

Upon the crown o' the cliff, what thing was that
Which parted from you?

Glo.

A poor unfortunate beggar.

Edg. As I stood here below, methought, his eyes
Were two full moons; he had a thousand noses,
Horns welk'd¹², and wav'd like the enridged sea;
It was some fiend: Therefore, thou happy father,
Think that the clearest¹³ gods, who make them honours
Of men's impossibilities¹⁴, have preserv'd thee.

Glo. I do remember now; henceforth I'll bear
Affliction, till it do cry out itself,

Enough, enough, and die. That thing you speak of,
I took it for a man; often 'twould say,

The fiend, the fiend: he led me to that place.

Edg. Bear free¹⁵ and patient thoughts.—But who comes here?

¹² Welk'd is marked with protuberances. This and whelk are probably only different forms of the same word. The welk is a small shellfish, so called, perhaps, because its shell is marked with convolved protuberant ridges. See vol. v. p. 348, note 11. The quartos erroneously print, "enraged sea."

¹³ That is, the purest; the most free from evil. So in Timon of Athens:—"Roots! you clear gods!"

¹⁴ By men's impossibilities is meant what men call impossibilities, what appear or are such to mere mortal beings.

¹⁵ "Bear free and patient thoughts." Free here means pure, as in other places of these plays. See vol. iii. p. 388, note 4; vol. iv. p. 39, note 5.

Enter LEAR, fantastically dressed up with Flowers.

The safer sense¹⁶ will ne'er accommodate His master thus.

Lear. No, they cannot touch me for coining¹⁷ ;
I am the king himself.

Edg. O thou side-piercing sight !

Lear. Nature's above art in that respect.—There's your press-money¹⁸. That fellow handles his bow like a crow-keeper¹⁹ : draw me a clothier's yard.—Look, look, a mouse ! Peace, peace ;—this piece of toasted cheese will do't.—There's my gauntlet ; I'll prove it on a giant.—Bring up the brown bills²⁰.—O, well

¹⁶ "The safer sense," says Mr. Blakeway, "seems to me to mean the eyesight, which, says Edgar, will never more serve the unfortunate Lear so well as those which Gloster has remaining will serve him, who is now returned to a right mind. Horace terms the eyes 'oculi fidelis,' and the eyesight may be called the safer sense in allusion to the proverb 'Seeing is believing.' Gloster afterwards laments the stiffness of his vile sense."

¹⁷ The folio has, "for crying ;" an evident error.

¹⁸ It is evident from the whole of this speech that Lear fancies himself amid the bustle and preparations for war—the recruiting, training, practising, &c. The military associations about him are running in his head. For the meaning of press money, see the first scene of Hamlet, note 11, which will also serve to explain the passage in Act v. Sc. 3 :—

"And turn our imprest lances in our eyes."

¹⁹ "Or if thou'lt not thy archery forbear,
To some base rustick do thyself prefer ;
And when corn's sown, or grown into the ear,
Practise thy quiver and turn crow-keeper."

Drayton, Idea the Forty-eighth.

Ascham, in speaking of awkward shooters, says :—"Another cowereth down, and layeth out his buttockes as though he would shoote at crows."

The subsequent expression of Lear, "draw me a clothier's yard," Steevens thinks, alludes to the old ballad of Chevy Chase :—

"An arrow of a cloth yard long,
Up to the head he drew," &c.

²⁰ Brown bills, i. e. battleaxes.

flown, bird!—i' the clout, i' the clout; hewgh!—Give the word²¹.

Edg. Sweet marjoram.

Lear. Pass.

Glo. I know that voice.

Lear. Ha! Goneril!—with a white beard!—They flatter'd me like a dog; and told me, I had white hairs in my beard, ere the black ones were there. To say ay, and no, to every thing I said!—Ay and no too was no good divinity²². When the rain came to wet me once, and the wind to make me chatter; when the thunder would not peace at my bidding; there I found them, there I smelt them out. Go to, they are not men o' their words: they told me I was every thing: 'tis a lie; I am not ague-proof.

Glo. The trick²³ of that voice I do well remember: Is't not the king?

Lear. Ay, every inch a king:
When I do stare, see how the subject quakes.
I pardon that man's life: what was thy cause?—
Adultery?

²² It has been proposed to read, "To say ay and no to every-thing I said ay and no to, was no good divinity." Besides the inaccuracy of construction in the passage as it stands in the text; it does not appear how it could be flattery to dissect from as well as assent to everything Lear said. It may, however, mean that they said ay or no, as he said ay or no; but more probably that they had double thoughts, and said ay to flatter him, when they said no to themselves, and vice versa.

²³ Trick is a word used for the air, or peculiarity in a face, voice, or gesture, which distinguishes it from others. We still say he has a trick of winking with his eyes," &c. See vol. iv. p. 255, note 8.

Thou shalt not die ; Die for adultery ! No :
 The wren goes to't, and the small gilded fly
 Does lecher in my sight. Let copulation thrive,
 For Gloster's bastard son was kinder to his father,
 Than my daughters got 'tween the lawful sheets.
 To't luxury²⁴ pell-mell, for I lack soldiers.—
 Behold yond' simpering dame,
 Whose face between her forks presageth snow²⁵ ;
 That minces²⁶ virtue, and does shake the head
 To hear of pleasure's name ;
 The fitchew, nor the soiled horse²⁷, goes to't
 With a more riotous appetite.
 Down from the waist they are centaurs,
 Though women all above ;
 But to the girdle do the gods inherit,
 Beneath is all the fiends' ; there's hell, there's darkness, there is the sulphurous pit, burning, scalding, stench, consumption ;—Fye, fye, fye ! pah ; pah !
 Give me an ounce of civet, good apothecary, to sweeten my imagination : there's money for thee.

Glo. O, let me kiss that hand !

Lear. Let me wipe it first ; it smells of mortality.

²⁴ Luxury, i. e. incontinence. See vol. vii. p. 269, note 4.

²⁵ The construction is, "Whose face presageth snow between her forks." So in Timon of Athens, Act iv. Sc. 3:—

"Whose blush doth thaw the consecrated snow
 That lies on Dian's lap."

See Cotgrave's Dict. in. v. Fourcheure.

²⁶ i. e. puts on an outward affected seeming of virtue. Thus Cotgrave in v. Mineux-se. "Outward seeming, also squeamish, quaint, coy, that minces it exceedingly." He also explains it under "Faire la sadinette, to mince it, nicefie it, be very squeamish, backward, or coy."

²⁷ i. e. The fitchew is the polecat. A soiled horse is a horse that has been fed with hay and corn during the winter, and is turned out in the spring to take the first flush of grass, or has it cut and carried to him. This at once cleanses the animal, and fills him with blood. In the old copies the preceding as well as the latter part of Lear's speech is printed as prose. It is too rhythmical to be left as mere prose, yet is rather lyric than heroic metre.

Glo. O ruin'd piece of nature ! This great world
Shall so wear out to nought.—Dost thou know me ?

Lear. I remember thine eyes well enough. Dost thou squiny at me ? No, do thy worst, blind Cupid ; I'll not love.—Read thou this challenge ; mark but the penning of it.

Glo. Were all the letters suns, I could not see one.

Edg. I would not take this from report ;—it is,
And my heart breaks at it.

Lear. Read.

Glo. What, with the case of eyes ?

Lear. O, ho, are you there with me ? No eyes in your head, nor no money in your purse ? Your eyes are in a heavy case, your purse in a light : Yet you see how this world goes.

Glo. I see it feelingly.

Lear. What, art mad ? A man may see how this world goes, with no eyes. Look with thine ears : see how yon' justice rails upon yon' simple thief. Hark, in thine ear : Change places ; and, handy-dandy, which is the justice, which is the thief ?—Thou hast seen a farmer's dog bark at a beggar ?

Glo. Ay, sir.

Lear. And the creature run from the cur ? There thou might'st behold the great image of authority : a dog's obey'd in office.

Thou rascal beadle, hold thy bloody hand :

Why dost thou lash that whore ? Strip thine own back ;

Thou hotly lust'st to use her in that kind

For which thou whipp'st her. The usurer hangs the cozener.

Through tatter'd clothes small²⁸ vices do appear ;

²⁸ The folio has "great vices."

Robes, and furr'd gowns, hide all²⁹. Plate³⁰ sin with gold,

And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks :
 Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it.
 None does offend, none, I say, none ; I'll able 'em³¹ :
 Take that of me, my friend, who have the power
 To seal the accuser's lips. Get thee glass eyes ;
 And, like a scurvy politician, seem
 To see the things thou dost not. — Now, now, now, now :

Pull off my boots :—harder, harder ; so.

Edg. O, matter and impertinency³² mix'd !
 Reason in madness !

Lear. If thou wilt weep my fortunes, take my eyes.
 I know thee well enough ; thy name is Gloster :
 Thou must be patient ; we came crying hither.
 Thou know'st, the first time that we smell the air,
 We wawl, and cry³³ :—I will preach to thee ; mark
 me.

Glo. Alack, alack the day !

²⁹ From “hide all” to “accuser's lips” is wanting in the quartos.

³⁰ The old copies read Place. Pope has the merit of this excellent emendation.

³¹ i. e. support or uphold them. So Chapman in the Widow's Tears, 1612 :—

“Admitted ! ay, into her heart, and I'll able it.”

Again, in his version of the twenty-third Iliad :—

“I'll able this

For five revolved years.”

³² Impertinency here is used in its old legitimate sense of something not belonging to the subject.

³³ “The childe feesles that, the man that feeling knowes,
 Which cries first borne, the presage of his life,” &c.

Sidney's Arcadia, lib. ii.

The passage is, however, evidently taken from Pliny, as translated by Philemon Holland, Proeme to b. vii.—“Man alone, poor wretch [nature] hath laid all naked upon the bare earth, even on his birthday to cry and wrawle presently from the very first houre that he is borne into this world.”—Douce.

Lear. When we are born, we cry, that we are come
To this great stage of fools;—This' a good block³⁴?
It were a delicate stratagem, to shoe
A troop of horse with felt: I'll put it in proof;
And when I have stolen upon these sons-in-law,
Then, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill.

Enter a Gentleman, with Attendants.

Gent. O, here he is, lay hand upon him.—Sir,
Your most dear daughter——

Lear. No rescue? What, a prisoner? I am even
The natural fool of fortune³⁵.—Use me well;
You shall have ransome. Let me have a surgeon,
I am cut to the brains.

Gent. You shall have any thing.

Lear. No seconds? All myself?
Why, this would make a man, a man of salt³⁶,

³⁴ This', here and elsewhere, is an ellipsis for This is. Upon the king's saying "I will preach to thee," the poet seems to have meant him to pull off his hat, and keep turning it and feeling it, till the idea of felt, which the good hat or block was made of, raises the stratagem in his brain of shoeing a troop of horse with the [same substance] which he held and moulded between his hands. So in Decker's Gull's Hornbook, 1609:—"That cannot observe the tune of his hatband, nor know what fashioned block is most kin to his head: for in my opinion the brain cannot chuse his felt well." This delicate stratagem is mentioned by Ariosto:—

"Fece nel cadar strepito quanto

Avesse avuto sotto i piedi il feltro."

It had, however, been actually put in practice about fifty years before Shakespeare was born, at a tournament held at Lisle before Henry VIII. [Oct. 13, 1513], where the horses, to prevent their sliding on a black stone pavement, were shod with felt or flocks (feltro sive tomento). See Lord Herbert's Life of King Henry VIII. p. 41.

³⁵ So in Romeo and Juliet:—"O, I am fortune's fool."

³⁶ "A man of salt" is a man of tears. In All's Well that Ends Well, we meet with "Your salt tears head." And in Troilus and Cressida, "the salt of broken tears." Again, in Coriolanus:—

To use his eyes for garden water-pots,
[Ay, and laying autumn's dust³⁷.

Gent. Good sir,—]

Lear. I will die bravely,
Like a smug bridegroom. What! I will be jovial.
Come, come; I am a king, my masters, know you
that?

Gent. You are a royal one, and we obey you.

Lear. Then there's life in't³⁸. Come, an you get it, you shall get it by running. Sa, sa, sa, sa³⁹.

[Exit, running; Attendants follow.

Gent. A sight most pitiful in the meanest wretch;
Past speaking of in a king!—Thou hast one daughter,
Who redeems nature from the general curse
Which twain have brought her to.

Edg. Hail, gentle sir.

Gent. Sir, speed you: What's your will?

Edg. Do you hear aught, sir, of a battle toward?

Gent. Most sure, and vulgar: every one hears that,
Which can distinguish sound.

Edg. But, by your favour,
How near's the other army?

Gent. Near, and on speedy foot, the main descry
Stands on the hourly thought⁴⁰.

Edg. I thank you, sir: that's all.

Gent. Though that the queen on special cause is here,

Her army is mov'd on.

Edg. I thank you, sir. [Exit Gent.

Glo. You ever-gentle gods, take my breath from me;

“He has betray'd your business, and given up,
For certain drops of salt, your city Rome.”

³⁷ This line, and the words “Good sir,” are not in the folio.

³⁸ i. e. The case is not yet desperate. So in Antony and Cleopatra:—“There's sap in't yet.”

³⁹ See p. 411, and p. 422, note 14, ante.

⁴⁰ i. e. the main body is expected to be descried every hour.

Let not my worser spirit tempt me again
To die before you please !

Edg. Well pray you, father.

Glo. Now, good sir, what are you ?

Edg. A most poor man, made tame to fortune's blows⁴¹ :

Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows⁴²,
Am pregnant to good pity. Give me your hand,
I'll lead you to some biding.

Glo. Hearty thanks :

The bounty and the benison of heaven
To boot, and boot !

Enter Steward.

Stew. A proclaim'd prize ! Most happy !
That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh
To raise my fortunes. Thou old unhappy traitor,
Briefly thyself remember⁴³ : The sword is out
That must destroy thee.

Glo. Now let thy friendly hand
Put strength enough to it. [EDGAR opposes.]

Stew. Wherefore, bold peasant,
Dar'st thou support a publish'd traitor ? Hence ;
Lest that the infection of his fortune take
Like hold on thee. Let go his arm.

Edg. Chill not let go, zir, without vurther 'casion.

Stew. Let go, slave, or thou diest.

Edg. Good gentleman, go your gait⁴⁴, and let poor

⁴¹ The quartos read, "by fortune's blows."

⁴² Feeling is probably used here for felt. Sorrows known not by relation, but by experience. Warburton explains it, "Sorrows past and present."

⁴³ i. e. "Quickly recollect the past offences of thy life, and recommend thyself to heaven."

⁴⁴ Gang your gait is a common expression in the north. In the last rebellion the Scotch soldiers, when they had finished their exercise, were dismissed by this phrase, "Gang your gaits." volk pass. And ch'ud ha' been zwagger'd out of my life, 'twould not ha' been zo long as 'tis by a vortnight. Nay, come not near the old man; keep out, che vor'ye⁴⁵, or ise try whether your costard⁴⁶ or my ballow⁴⁷ be the harder: Ch'ill be plain with you.

Stew. Out, dunghill!

Edg. Ch'ill pick your teeth, zir; Come; no matter vor your foins⁴⁸.

[They fight; and EDGAR knocks him down.]

Stew. Slave, thou hast slain me:—Villain, take my purse;

If ever thou wilt thrive, bury my body;
And give the letters, which thou find'st about me,
To Edmund earl of Gloster; seek him out
Upon the British⁴⁹ party:—O, untimely death!

[Dies.]

Edg. I know thee well: A serviceable villain;
As duteous to the vices of thy mistress,
As badness would desire.

Glo.

What, is he dead?

Edg. Sit you down, father; rest you.

Let's see his pockets; these letters, that he speaks of,
May be my friends.—He's dead: I am only sorry
He had no other deathsman. Let us see:
Leave, gentle wax; and, manners, blame us not:
To know our enemies' minds, we'd rip their hearts;
Their papers, is more lawful.

⁴⁵ i. e. I warn you. When our ancient writers have occasion to introduce a rustic, they commonly allot him the Somersetshire dialect. Golding, in his translation of the second book of Ovid's Metamorphoses, makes Mercury, assuming the appearance of a clown, speak with the provinciality of Edgar.

⁴⁶ i. e. head. See vol. ii. p. 220, note 12.

⁴⁷ A ballow is a provincial word for a pole or staff. One of the quartos has bat.

⁴⁸ i. e. thrusts. See vol. i. p. 231, note 1.

⁴⁹ The folio has, "Upon the English party." And death is repeated at the end of the line.

[Reads.] "Let our reciprocal vows be remembered. You have many opportunities to cut him off: if your will want not, time and place will be fruitfully offered. There is nothing done, if he return the conqueror: Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my gaol; from the loathed warmth whereof deliver me, and supply the place for your labour.—Your (wife so I would say), affectionate servant,

GONERIL."

O undistinguish'd space of woman's will⁵⁰!—

A plot upon her virtuous husband's life;

And the exchange, my brother!—Here, in the sands,

Thee I'll rake up, the post unsanctified⁵¹

Of murderous lechers: and, in the mature time,

With this ungracious paper strike the sight

Of the death-practis'd duke⁵²: for him 'tis well,

That of thy death and business I can tell.

Glo. The king is mad: How stiff is my vile sense,

That I stand up, and have ingenious feeling⁵³

Of my huge sorrows! Better I were distract:

So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs;

And woes, by wrong imaginations, lose

⁵⁰ The quartos have:—

"O undistinguished space of woman's wit."

The folio has:—

"Oh indistinguish'd space of Woman's will."

The meaning of the passage seems to be:—"O, how undistinguishing and unlimited is the blind wilful lust of woman! How immense is the difference between the virtuous Albany and Edmund, for whom he is to be exchanged." Undistinguished for undistinguishing; the passive participle for the active is in keeping with the poet's practice in similar cases.

⁵¹ "Thee I'll rake up, the post unsanctified," &c.

i. e. I'll cover thee. In Staffordshire to rake the fire is to cover it for the night. Unsanctified refers to his want of burial in consecrated ground.

⁵² That is, the Duke of Albany, whose death is machinated by practice or treason.

⁵³ Ingenious feeling. Bullokar, in his Expositor, interprets "ingenious by quick conceited," i. e. acute. This makes Warburton's paraphrase unnecessary.

The knowledge of themselves. [Drum afar off.

Edg.

Give me your hand :

Far off, methinks, I hear the beaten drum.

Come, father, I'll bestow you with a friend.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VII. A Tent in the French Camp. LEAR on a Bed, asleep : Physician, Gentleman¹, and Others attending.

Enter CORDELIA and KENT.

Cor. O thou good Kent, how shall I live, and work,
To match thy goodness? My life will be too short,
And every measure fail me.

Kent. To be acknowledg'd, madam, is o'erpaid.
All my reports go with the modest truth ;
Nor more, nor clipp'd, but so.

Cor. Be better suited² :
These weeds are memories³ of those worsè hours ;
I pr'ythee, put them off.

Kent. Pardon me, dear madam ;
Yet to be known, shortens my made intent⁴ :
My boon I make it, that you know me not,
Till time and I think meet.

Cor. Then be it so, my good lord.—How does the king? [To the Physician.

Phys. Madam, sleeps still.

Cor. O you kind gods,
Cure this great breach in his abused nature !

¹ In the folio the Gentleman and the Physician is one and the same person.

² i. e. be better dressed, put on a better suit of clothes.

³ Memories are memorials. See vol. iii. p. 31, note 1.

⁴ A made intent is an intent formed. We say in common language to make a design, and to make a resolution. Mr. Collier's folio substitutes main for made.

The untun'd and jarring senses, O, wind up,
Of this child-changed father⁵!

Phys. So please your majesty,
That we may wake the king? he hath slept long.

Cor. Be govern'd by your knowledge, and proceed
I' the sway of your own will. Is he array'd?

Phys. Ay, madam; in the heaviness of his sleep,
We put fresh garments on him.

Kent. Good madam, be by, when we do awake him.
I doubt not of his temperance.

[Cor. Very well.

Phys. Please you, draw near.—Louder the musick there⁶.]

Cor. O my dear father! Restoration⁷, hang
Thy medicine on my lips; and let this kiss
Repair those violent harms, that my two sisters
Have in thy reverence made!

Kent. Kind and dear princess!

Cor. Had you not been their father, these white flakes

Had challeng'd pity of them. Was this a face
To be expos'd⁸ against the warring winds?

[To stand against the deep dread-bolted thunder?

⁵ That is, changed by his children; a father whose jarring senses have been untuned by the monstrous ingratitude of his daughters. So care-crazed, crazed by care; woe-wearied, wearied by woe, &c.

⁶ This and the foregoing speech are not in the folio. It has been already observed that Shakespeare considered soft music as favourable to sleep. Lear, we may suppose, had been thus composed to rest; and now the Physician desires louder music to be played, for the purpose of waking him. So again in Pericles, Cerimon, to recover Thaisa, who had been thrown into the sea, says:—

“The rough and woeful musick that we have,
Cause it to sound, beseech you.”

Again in The Winter's Tale:—

“Musick, awake her, strike!”

⁷ Restoration is no more than recovery personified.

⁸ The folio has, “opposed,” and “jarring winds.”

In the most terrible and nimble stroke
 Of quick, cross lightning? to watch (poor perdu!)
 With this thin helm⁹?] Mine enemy's dog,
 Though he had bit me, should have stood that night
 Against my fire; And wast thou fain, poor father,
 To hovel thee with swine, and rogues forlorn,
 In short and musty straw? Alack, alack!
 'Tis wonder, that thy life and wits at once
 Had not concluded all¹⁰.—He wakes; speak to him.

Phys. Madam, do you; 'tis fittest.

Cor. How does my royal lord? How fares your majesty?

Lear. You do me wrong, to take me out o' the grave:—

Thou art a soul in bliss; but I am bound
 Upon a wheel of fire, that mine own tears
 Do scald like molten lead.

Cor. Sir, do you know me?

Lear. You are a spirit, I know; When did you die^a?

Cor. Still, still, far wide!

Phys. He's scarce awake; let him alone awhile.

⁹ The lines in crotchets are not in the folio. The allusion is to the forlorn hope of an army, called in French enfants perdus; amongst other desperate adventures in which they were engaged, the night watches seem to have been a common one. Warburton is wrong in supposing that those ordered on such services were lightly or badly armed, the contrary is clearly the fact, and to such a fact is the allusion of the poet—"Poor perdu, you are exposed to the most dangerous situation, not with the most proper arms, but with a mere helmet of thin and hoary hair." The same allusion occurs in Davenant's Love and Honour, 1649:—

"I have endured

Another night would tire a perdu

More than a wet furrow and a great frost."

So in Beaumont and Fletcher's Little French Lawyer:—

"I am set here like a perdu,

To watch a fellow that has wronged my mistress."

¹⁰ i. e. had not all ended. So in Timon of Athens:—

"And dispossess her all."

^a The folio and two of the quartos have, "Where did you die?"

Lear. Where have I been?—Where am I?—Fair day light?—

I am mightily abus'd¹¹.—I should even die with pity,
To see another thus.—I know not what to say.—
I will not swear these are my hands:—let's see;
I feel this pin prick. 'Would I were assur'd
Of my condition.

Cor. O! look upon me, sir,
And hold your hands in benediction o'er me;—
No, sir, you must not kneel¹².

Lear. Pray, do not mock me:
I am a very foolish fond old man,
Fourscore and upward;
Not an hour more, nor less¹³; and, to deal plainly,
I fear, I am not in my perfect mind.
Methinks, I should know you, and know this man:
Yet I am doubtful: for I am mainly ignorant
What place this is; and all the skill I have Remembers not these garments; nor I know not
Where I did lodge last night: Do not laugh at me;
For, as I am a man, I think this lady
To be my child Cordelia.

Cor. And so I am, I am.

Lear. Be your tears wet? Yes, 'faith. I pray, weep not:
If you have poison for me, I will drink it.

¹¹ i. e. "I am strangely imposed upon by appearances; I am in a strange mist of uncertainty."

¹² "This circumstance is found in the old play of King Leir, apparently written by another hand, and published before any edition of Shakespeare's play had made its appearance. As it is always difficult to say whether such accidental resemblances proceed from imitation, or a similarity of thinking on the same occasion, I can only point out this to the reader, to whose determination I leave the question."—Steevens.

¹³ The words "not an hour more nor less" are omitted in the quartos, and by Malone, Steevens, and others. I have followed the reading and arrangement of the folio.

I know, you do not love me ; for your sisters
Have, as I do remember, done me wrong :
You have some cause, they have not.

Cor. No cause, no cause.

Lear. Am I in France ?

Kent. In your own kingdom, sir.

Lear. Do not abuse me.

Phys. Be comforted, good madam : the great rage,
You see, is cur'd¹⁴ in him : [and yet it is danger
To make him even¹⁵ o'er the time he has lost.]
Desire him to go in ; trouble him no more,
Till further settling.

Cor. Will't please your highness walk ?

Lear. You must bear with me :
'Pray now, forget and forgive : I am old, and foolish.

[Exeunt LEAR, CORDELIA, Physician, and Attendants.]

[Gent. Holds it true, sir,
That the Duke of Cornwall was so slain ?

Kent. Most certain, sir.

Gent. Who is conductor of his people ?

Kent. As 'tis said,

The bastard son of Gloster.

Gent. They say, Edgar,
His banish'd son, is with the Earl of Kent
In Germany.

Kent. Report is changeable.

'Tis time to look about ; the powers o' the kingdom
Approach apace.

Gent. The arbitrement is like to be bloody.

¹⁴ The folio has kill'd.

¹⁵ "To make him even o'er the time he has lost," is "to make the occurrences of it plain or level to his troubled mind." See Baret's Alvearie, 1573, E. 307. The words in brackets are not in the folio, and the scene ends with the words, "I am old and foolish."

Fare you well, sir.

[Exit.

Kent. My point and period will be thoroughly wrought,

Or well, or ill, as this day's battle's fought¹⁶.]

[Exit.

ACT V.

SCENE I. The Camp of the British Forces, near Dover.

Enter, with Drums, and Colours, EDMUND, REGAN, Officers, Soldiers, and Others.

Edmund.

NOW of the duke, if his last purpose hold ;
Or, whether since he is advis'd by aught
To change the course: He's full of alteration,
And self-reproving :—bring his constant pleasure¹.

[To an Officer, who goes out.

Reg. Our sister's man is certainly miscarried.

Edm. 'Tis to be doubted, madam.

Reg. Now, sweet lord,
You know the goodness I intend upon you :
Tell me, but truly, but then speak the truth,
Do you not love my sister ?

Edm. In honour'd love.

Reg. But have you never found my brother's way
To the forefended² place ?

[Edm. That thought abuses³ you.

Reg. I am doubtful that you have been conjunct

¹⁶ What is printed in crotchets is not in the folio. It is at least proper, if not necessary, and was perhaps only omitted by the players to abridge a play of very considerable length.

¹ i. e. his settled resolution. See Act i. Sc. 1, note 8.

² The lines in brackets are omitted in the folio.

³ i. e. imposes on you; you are deceived.

And bosom'd with her, as far as we call hers.]

Edm. No, by mine honour, madam.

Reg. I never shall endure her: Dear my lord,
Be not familiar with her.

Edm. Fear me not:—
She, and the duke her husband⁴.

Enter, with Drum and Colours, ALBANY, GONERIL, and Soldiers.

[Gon. I had rather lose the battle, than that sister
Should loosen him and me.] [Aside.

Alb. Our very loving sister, well be-met.—
Sir, this I hear,—The king is come to his daughter,
With others, whom the rigour of our state
Forc'd to cry out. [Where I could not be honest,
I never yet was valiant: for this business,
It toucheth us as France invades our land,
Not bolds⁵ the king.

Edm. Sir, you speak nobly^a.]

Reg. Why is this reason'd?

Gon. Combine together 'gainst the enemy:
For these domestick and particular broils⁶

⁴ i. e. here she comes, &c.

⁵ "This business," says Albany, "touches us, as France invades our land, not as it emboldens or encourages the king to assert his former title." Thus in the ancient Interlude of Hycke Scornor:—

"Alas, that I had not one to bolde me."

Again, in Arthur Hall's translation of the fourth Iliad, 4to. 1581:—

"And Pallas bolds the Greeks," &c.

"To make bolde, to encourage, animum addere."—Baret.

^a What is between crotchets is omitted in the folio. The quarto has at the end of Albany's speech:—

"With others, whom I fear,

Most just and heavy causes make oppose."

A mere paraphrase of words occurring just before.

⁶ The quartos have it:—

"For these domestick doore particulars."

Are not to⁷ question here.

Alb. Let's then determine
With the ancient of war on our proceedings.
[Edm. I shall attend you presently at your tent⁸.]
Reg. Sister, you'll go with us?
Gon. No.
Reg. 'Tis most convenient; 'pray you, go with us.
Gon. O, ho! I know the riddle: [Aside.] I will go.

As they are going out, Enter EDGAR disguised.

Edg. If e'er your grace had speech with man so poor,
Hear me one word.
Alb. I'll o'ertake you.—Speak.
[Exeunt EDMUND, REGAN, GONERIL, Officers, Soldiers, and Attendants.

Edg. Before you fight the battle, ope this letter.
If you have victory, let the trumpet sound
For him that brought it: wretched though I seem,
I can produce a champion, that will prove
What is avouched there: If you miscarry,
Your business of the world hath so an end,
And machination ceases⁹. Fortune love you!
Alb. Stay till I have read the letter.

Edg. I was forbid it.
When time shall serve, let but the herald cry,
And I'll appear again. [Exit.
Alb. Why, fare thee well; I will o'erlook thy paper.

Re-enter EDMUND.

Edm. The enemy's in view, draw up your powers,

⁷ The folio reads, the question; and two lines lower, proceeding.

⁸ This speech is wanting in the folio.

⁹ i. e. all designs against your life will have an end. These words are not in the quartos.

Here is the guess of their true strength and forces
By diligent discovery¹⁰;—but your haste
Is now urg'd on you.

Alb. We will greet the time¹¹. [Exit.

Edm. To both these sisters have I sworn my love;
Each jealous of the other, as the stung
Are of the adder. Which of them shall I take?
Both! one? or neither? Neither can be enjoy'd,
If both remain alive; To take the widow,
Exasperates, makes mad her sister Goneril;
And hardly shall I carry out my side¹²,
Her husband being alive. Now then, we'll use
His countenance for the battle; which being done,
Let her, who would be rid of him, devise
His speedy taking off. As for the mercy
Which he intends to Lear, and to Cordelia,—
The battle done, and they within our power,
Shall never see his pardon: for my state
Stands on me to defend, not to debate¹³. [Exit.

¹⁰ i. e. “the conjecture, or what we can gather by diligent espial, of their strength.” So in King Henry IV. Part I. Act iv. Sc. 1:—

“Send discoverers forth

To know the number of our enemies.”

The passage has only been thought obscure for want of a right understanding of the word discovery, which neither Malone nor Steevens seem to have understood. Edmund must be supposed to give a paper to Albany.

¹¹ i. e. be ready to meet the occasion.

¹² i. e. “Hardly shall I be able to make my side (i. e. my party) good; to maintain the game.” Steevens has shown that it was a phrase commonly used at cards. So in the Paston Letters, vol. iv. p. 155:—“Heydon’s son hath borne out the side stoutly here,” &c.

¹³ i. e. “Such is my determination concerning Lear; as for my state, it requires now not deliberation, but defence and support.”

SCENE II. A Field between the two Camps.

Alarum within. Enter, with Drum and Colours, LEAR, CORDELIA, and their Forces; and exeunt.

Enter EDGAR and GLOSTER¹.

Edg. Here, father, take the shadow of this tree
For your good host; pray that the right may thrive:
If ever I return to you again,
I'll bring you comfort.

Glo. Grace go with you, sir!
[Exit EDGAR.]

Alarums; afterwards a Retreat. Re-enter EDGAR.

Edg. Away, old man, give me thy hand, away;
King Lear hath lost, he and his daughter ta'en:
Give me thy hand, come on.

Glo. No further, sir; a man may rot even here.

Edg. What, in ill thoughts again? Men must endure
Their going hence, even as their coming hither:
Ripeness is all²: Come on.

Glo. And that's true too.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The British Camp near DOVER.

Enter, in Conquest, with Drum and Colours, EDMUND; LEAR and CORDELIA, as Prisoners; Officers, Soldiers, &c.

Edm. Some officers take them away; good guard:
Until their greater pleasures first be known

¹ Those who are curious to know how far Shakespeare was indebted to the Arcadia, will find a chapter entitled "The Pitifull State and Storie of the Paphlagonian unkinde King, and his kinde Sonne; first related by the Sonne, then by the blinde Father," at p. 141 of the edition of 1590, 4to.

² i. e. to be ready, prepared, is all. So in Hamlet:—"If it be not now, yet it will come: the readiness is all."

That are to censure¹ them.

Cor. We are not the first,
Who, with best meaning, have incurr'd the worst².
For thee, oppressed king, am I cast down ;
Myself could else outfrown false fortune's frown.
Shall we not see these daughters, and these sisters ?

Lear. No, no, no, no ! Come, let's away to prison :
We two alone will sing like birds i' the cage :
When thou dost ask me blessing, I'll kneel down,
And ask of thee forgiveness : So we'll live,
And pray, and sing, and tell old tales, and laugh
At gilded butterflies, and hear poor rogues
Talk of court news ; and we'll talk with them too,
Who loses, and who wins ; who's in, who's out ;—
And take upon us the mystery of things,
As if we were God's spies³ : And we'll wear out,
In a wall'd prison, packs and sects⁴ of great ones,
That ebb and flow by the moon.

Edm. Take them away.

Lear. Upon such sacrifices, my Cordelia,
The gods themselves throw incense⁵. Have I caught
thee ?

He that parts us, shall bring a brand from heaven,
And fire us hence, like foxes⁶. Wipe thine eyes ;

¹ i. e. to pass sentence or judgment on them. So in Othello:—
“ Remains the censure of this hellish villain.”

² That is, the worst that fortune can inflict.

³ i. e. “ As if we were angels, endowed with the power of prying into the original motives of action and the mysteries of conduct.”

⁴ Packs and sects are combinations and parties.

⁵ “ The thought is extremely noble, and expressed in a sublime of imagery that Seneca fell short of on a similar occasion:— ‘ Ecce spectaculum dignum ad quod respiciat intenti operi suo deus: ecce par deo dignum vir fortis cum mala fortuna compositus.’ ”—Warburton.

⁶ Alluding to the old practice of smoking foxes out of their holes. So in Harington's translation of Ariosto, b. xxvii. stan. 17:—

The goujeers shall devour them, flesh and fell⁷, Ere they shall make us weep : we'll see'em starve first.

Come. [Exeunt LEAR and CORDELIA, guarded.

Edm. Come hither, captain ; hark.

Take thou this note⁸ ; [Giving a Paper.] go, follow them to prison :

One step I have advanc'd thee ; if thou dost
As this instructs thee, thou dost make thy way
To noble fortunes : Know thou this,—that men
Are as the time is : to be tender-minded
Does not become a sword :—Thy great employment
Will not bear question⁹ : either say, thou'lt do't,
Or thrive by other means.

Off. I'll do't, my lord.

Edm. About it ; and write happy, when thou'st done.

“E'en as a foxe whom smoke and fire doth fright,
So as he dare not in the ground remaine,
Bolts out and through the smoke and fire he flieth
Into the tarriers mouth, and there he dieth.”

⁷ The goujeers shall devour them, flesh and fell.

The goujeers, i. e. morbis Gallicus. See Nares' Glossary or the Variorum Shakespeare. It was a common term of imprecation, and was followed by another from the same disease. We find it frequently written good yeres, as it stands in the folio. Mr. Knight gives a note from Tieck approvingly, in which he, a foreigner, accuses the editors of Shakespeare of having “understood the poet as little as their own language.” Mr. Knight may be assured that both he and Tieck are in error on this occasion. I would simply ask how the good years were to consume the flesh and fell of Lear's daughters? a loathsome disease might. Flesh and fell is flesh and skin. Thus in The Speculum Vitæ, MS.—

“That alle men sal a domesday rise
Oute of their graves in fleshe and felle.”

So in The Dyar's Playe, Chester Mysteries :—

“I made thee man of flesh and fell.”

⁸ This was a warrant signed by the Bastard and Goneril, for the execution of Lear and Cordelia, referred to in a subsequent scene by Edmund.

Mark,—I say instantly ; and carry it so,
As I have set it down.

[Off. I cannot draw a cart, nor eat dried oats ;
If it be man's work, I will do it¹⁰.] [Exit Officer.

Flourish. Enter ALBANY, GONERIL, REGAN,
Officers, and Attendants.

Alb. Sir, you have shown to-day your valiant strain,
And fortune led you well : You have the captives
Who were the opposites of this day's strife :
We do require them of you ; so to use them,
As we shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine.

Edm. Sir, I thought it fit
To send the old and miserable king
To some retention, and appointed guard ;
Whose age has charms in it, whose title more,
To pluck the common bosom on his side,
And turn our impress'd lances¹¹ in our eyes
Which do command them. With him I sent the queen ;
My reason all the same ; and they are ready
To-morrow, or at further space, to appear
Where you shall hold your session. [At this time
We sweat and bleed : the friend hath lost his friend :
And the best quarrels, in the heat, are curs'd
By those that feel their sharpness :—
The question of Cordelia, and her father,
Requires a fitter place¹².]

Alb. Sir, by your patience,

¹⁰ This speech is omitted in the folio, as are the words "and appointed guard" in a subsequent line.

¹¹ That is, the lancemen we have hired by giving them press money.

¹² i. e. "The determination of what shall be done with Cordelia and her father, should be reserved for greater privacy." The passage in brackets is not in the folio.

I hold you but a subject of this war,
Not as a brother.

Reg. That's as we list to grace him.
Methinks, our pleasure might have been demanded,
Ere you had spoke so far. He led our powers ;
Bore the commission¹³ of my place and person ;
The which immediacy¹⁴ may well stand up,
And call itself your brother.

Gon. Not so hot :
In his own grace¹⁵ he doth exalt himself,
More than in your advancement¹⁶.

Reg. In my rights,
By me invested, he compeers the best.

Gon. That were the most, if he should husband you¹⁷.

Reg. Jesters do oft prove prophets.

Gon. Holla, holla !
That eye, that told you so, look'd but a-squint¹⁸.

Reg. Lady, I am not well ; else I should answer
From a full flowing stomach.—General,
Take thou my soldiers, prisoners, patrimony ;
Dispose of them, of me ; the walls are thine¹⁹ :
Witness the world, that I create thee here
My lord and master.

Gon. Mean you to enjoy him ?

¹³ Commission for authority.

¹⁴ Inmediacy is, I think, close and immediate connexion with me, and direct authority from me. Immediate is the reading of the quartos.

¹⁵ Grace here means, noble deportment.

¹⁶ The folio reads, "your addition."

¹⁷ i. e. "If he were married to you, you could not say more than this, nor could he enjoy greater power." In the folio this line is given to Albany.

¹⁸ Alluding to the proverb, "Love being jealous makes a good eye look a-squint." So Milton:—

"And gladly banish squint suspicion." Comus.

¹⁹ A metaphor taken from the camp, and signifying to surrender at discretion. This line is not in the quartos.

Alb. The let alone lies not in your good will²⁰.

Edm. Nor in thine, lord.

Alb. Half-blooded fellow, yes.

Reg. Let the drum strike, and prove my title thine²¹.

[To EDMUND.]

Alb. Stay yet; hear reason: Edmund, I arrest thee
On capital treason; and, in thine, attain²²
This gilded serpent: [Pointing to GON.—for your claim, fair sister,

I bar it in the interest of my wife;
'Tis she is subcontracted to this lord,
And I, her husband, contradict your bans.
If you will marry, make your love to me,
My lady is bespoke.

Gon. An interlude!

Alb. Thou art arm'd, Gloster:—Let the trumpet sound:

If none appear to prove upon thy head,
Thy heinous, manifest, and many treasons,
There is my pledge; [Throwing down a Glove.] I'll prove it on thy heart²³,
Ere I taste bread, thou art in nothing less
Than I have here proclaim'd thee.

Reg. Sick, O, sick!

Gon. If not, I'll ne'er trust poison²⁴. [Aside]

Edm. There's my exchange: [Throwing down a Glove.] what in the world he is

²⁰ i. e. "To obstruct their union lies not in your good pleasure, your veto will avail nothing."

²¹ It appears from this speech that Regan did not know that Albany had discharged her forces. This line is given to Edmund in the quartos, which read "my title good."

²² The folio reads, "thy arrest."

²³ Thus the quartos. The folio, probably to avoid the repetition of prove it, reads, "I'll make it on thy heart." In the line above, the folio has, "If none appear to prove upon thy person," instead of head.

²⁴ The folio has, "I'll ne'er trust medicine."

That names me traitor, villain-like he lies :
 Call by thy trumpet : he that dares approach,
 On him, on you, (who not ?) I will maintain
 My truth and honour firmly.

Alb. A herald, ho !

Edm. [A herald, ho, a herald !]²⁵

Alb. Trust to thy single virtue²⁶ ; for thy soldiers,
 All levied in my name, have in my name
 Took their discharge.

Reg. This sickness grows upon me.

Enter a Herald.

Alb. She is not well ; convey her to my tent.

[Exit REGAN, led.

Come hither, herald.—Let the trumpet sound,—
 And read out this.

Off. Sound, trumpet. [A Trumpet sounds.

Herald reads.

“ If any man of quality, or degree, within the lists of the army, will maintain upon Edmund, supposed earl of Gloster, that he is a manifold traitor, let him appear at the third sound of the trumpet : He is bold in his defence.”

Edm. Sound. [1 Trumpet.

Her. Again. [2 Trumpet.

Her. Again. [3 Trumpet.

[Trumpet answers within.

Enter EDGAR, armed, preceded by a Trumpet.

Alb. Ask him his purposes, why he appears
 Upon this call o' the trumpet²⁷.

²⁵ These words are not in the folio, which also omits the words
 “ Sound, trumpet,” a few lines lower.

²⁶ i. e. valour ; a Roman sense of the word. Thus Raleigh :—
 “The conquest of Palestine with singular virtue they performed.”

²⁷ This is according to the ceremonials of the trial by combat in cases criminal. “The appellant and his procurator first come

Her. What are you?
Your name, your quality? and why you answer
This present summons?

Edg. Know, my name is lost;
By treason's tooth bare-gnawn, and canker-bit.
Yet am I noble as the adversary
I come to cope withal²⁸.

Alb. Which is that adversary?

Edg. What's he, that speaks for Edmund earl of Gloster?

Edm. Himself; What say'st thou to him?

Edg. Draw thy sword;
That, if my speech offend a noble heart,
'Thy arm may do thee justice: here is mine.
Behold, it is my privilege, the privilege of mine
honours,
My oath, and my profession²⁹: I protest,—
Maugre thy strength, place, youth, and eminence,
Despite³⁰ thy victor sword, and fire-new fortune,
Thy valour, and thy heart,—thou art a traitor:
False to thy gods, thy brother, and thy father;
Conspirant 'gainst this high illustrious prince;
And, from the extremest upward of thy head,
To the descent and dust beneath thy feet,
A most toad-spotted traitor. Say thou, No,
This sword, this arm, and my best spirits, are bent
To prove upon thy heart, whereto I speak, to the gate. The constable and marshall demand by voice of herald, what he is, and why he comes so arrayed."—Selden's Duello.
Thou liest.

²⁸ The word withal is omitted in the folio.

²⁹ "Here I draw my sword. Behold, it is the privilege or right of my profession to draw it against a traitor." It is the right of bringing the charge, and maintaining it with his sword, which Edgar calls the privilege of his profession. The quarto has merely, "Behold, it is the privilege of my tongue."

³⁰ The folio reads, erroneously, Despise

Edm. In wisdom, I should ask thy name³¹ ;
 But, since thy outside looks so fair and warlike,
 And that thy tongue some 'say³² of breeding breathes,
 What safe and nicely³³ I might well delay
 By rule of knighthood, I disdain and spurn :
 Back do I toss these treasons to thy head ;
 With the hell-hated lie o'erwhelm thy heart ;
 Which (for they yet glance by, and scarcely bruise),
 This sword of mine shall give them instant way,
 Where they shall rest for ever³⁴.—Trumpets, speak.

[Alarums. They fight, EDMUND falls.

Alb. Save him, save him³⁵ !

Gon. This is mere³⁶ practice, Gloster :
 By the law of arms, thou wast not bound to answer
 An unknown opposite ; thou art not vanquish'd,
 But cozen'd and beguil'd.

Alb. Shut your mouth, dame,
 Or with this paper shall I stop it :—Hold, sir :—
 Thou worse than any name, read thine own evil :—
 No tearing, lady ; I perceive you know it.

[Gives the Letter to EDMUND.

Gon. Say, if I do ; the laws are mine, not thine :

³¹ Because, if his adversary was not of equal rank, Edmund might have declined the combat. Goneril afterwards says :—

“ By the law of arms, thou wast not bound to answer
 An unknown opposite.”

³² 'Say, or assay, is a sample, a taste. So in the preface to Maurice Kyffin's translation of the Andria of Terence, 1588 :—
 “ Some other like places I could recite, but these shall suffice for a say.”

³³ “ What safe and nicely I might well delay.”
 This seems to mean “ What I might safely well delay if I acted punctiliously.” This line is omitted in the quartos, but without it the subsequent line is nonsense.

³⁴ To that place where they shall rest for ever. i. e. thy heart.

³⁵ Albany desires that Edmund's life may be spared at present, only to obtain his confession, and to convict him openly by his own letter.

³⁶ The folio omits mere, and in the next line has war for arms

Who shall³⁷ arraign me for't? [Exit GONERIL.

Alb. Most monstrous!

Know'st thou this paper³⁸?

Edm. Ask me not what I know.

Alb. Go after her: she's desperate; govern her.

[To an Officer, who goes out.

Edm. What you have charg'd me with, that have I done;

And more, much more: the time will bring it out;
'Tis past, and so am I: But what art thou,
That hast this fortune on me? If thou art noble,
I do forgive thee.

Edg. Let's exchange charity.

I am no less in blood than thou art, Edmund;
If more, the more thou hast wrong'd me.
My name is Edgar, and thy father's son.
The gods are just, and of our pleasant vices
Make instruments to scourge us³⁹:
The dark and vicious place where thee he got,
Cost him his eyes.

Edm. Thou'st spoken right, 'tis true;
The wheel is come full circle; I am here.

Alb. Methought, thy very gait did prophesy
A royal nobleness:—I must embrace thee;
Let sorrow split my heart, if ever I
Did hate thee, or thy father!

Edg. Worthy prince, I know't.

Alb. Where have you hid yourself?
How have you known the miseries of your father?

Edg. By nursing them, my lord. — List a brief tale:

³⁷ The folio reads, can.

³⁸ "Knowest thou these letters," says Lear to Regan, in the old anonymous play, when he shows her both her own and her sister's letters, which were written to procure his death, upon which she snatches the letters and tears them.

³⁹ The folio reads, "to plague us."

And, when 'tis told, O that my heart would burst!
 The bloody proclamation to escape,
 That follow'd me so near (O our lives' sweetness!
 That with the pain of death we'd hourly die⁴⁰,
 Rather than die at once!) taught me to shift
 Into a madman's rags; to assume a semblance
 That very dogs disdain'd: and in this habit
 Met I my father with his bleeding rings,
 Their precious stones new lost⁴¹; became his guide,
 Led him, begg'd for him, sav'd him from despair;
 Never (O fault!) reveal'd myself unto him,
 Until some half hour past, when I was arm'd,
 Not sure, though hoping, of this good success;
 I ask'd his blessing, and from first to last
 Told him my pilgrimage: But his flaw'd heart
 (Alack, too weak the conflict to support!)
 'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,
 Burst smilingly.

Edm. This speech of yours hath mov'd me,
 And shall, perchance, do good: but speak you on;
 You look as you had something more to say.

Alb. If there be more, more woful, hold it in;
 For I am almost ready to dissolve,
 Hearing of this.

⁴²[Edg. This would have seem'd a period
 To such as love not sorrow, but another,
 To amplify too much, would make much more,
 And top extremity⁴³.

⁴⁰ "To die hourly with the pain of death," is a periphrasis for "to suffer hourly the pains of death." The folio reads.—

"That we the pain of death would hourly die."

⁴¹ So in Pericles:—

"Her eyelids, cases to those heavenly jewels
 Which Pericles hath lost."

⁴² The lines within crotchets are not in the folio.

⁴³ Of this difficult passage, which is probably corrupt, Steevens gives the following explanation:—"This would have seem'd a period to such as love not sorrow, but—another, i. e. but I must

Whilst I was big in clamour, came there a man,
 Who having seen me in my worst estate,
 Shunn'd my abhorr'd society ; but then, finding
 Who 'twas that so endur'd, with his strong arms
 He fasten'd on my neck, and bellow'd out
 As he'd burst heaven : threw him⁴⁴ on my father ;
 Told the most piteous tale of Lear and him,
 That ever ear receiv'd : which in recounting
 His grief grew puissant, and the strings of life
 Began to crack : Twice then the trumpet sounded,
 And there I left him tranc'd.

Alb.

But who was this ?

Edg. Kent, sir, the banish'd Kent ; who in disguise

Follow'd his enemy king, and did him service
 Improper for a slave.]

Enter a Gentleman hastily, with a bloody Knife.

Gent. Help ! help ! O help !

Edg. What kind of help ?

add another, i. e. another period, another kind of conclusion to my story, such as will increase the horrors of what has been already told." It will be necessary, if we admit this interpretation, to point the passage thus:—

“ But another:—

(To amplify too much, would make much more,

And top extremity,)

Whilst I was big,” &c.

Malone's explanation is:—“ This would have seemed the utmost completion of woe, to such as do not delight in sorrow, but another, of a different disposition, to amplify misery ‘ would give more strength to that which hath too much.’” Referring to the Bastard's desiring to hear more, and to Albany's thinking that enough had been said.

⁴⁴ The quartos read, “ threw me on my father.” Steevens thus defends the present reading:—“ There is a tragic propriety in Kent's throwing himself on the body of a deceased friend ; but this propriety is lost in the act of clumsily tumbling a son over the lifeless remains of his father.” Mr. Dyce has shown how easily the error is made.

Alb. Speak, man⁴⁵.

Edg. What means that bloody knife?

Gent. 'Tis hot, it smokes;

It came even from the heart of—

Alb. Who, man? speak.

Gent. Your lady, sir, your lady: and her sister
By her is poison'd; she hath confess'd it⁴⁶.

Edm. I was contracted to them both; all three
Now marry in an instant.

Alb. Produce their bodies, be they alive or dead!—
This judgement of the heavens, that makes us tremble,
Touches us not with pity⁴⁷. [Exit Gentleman.]

Enter KENT.

Edg. Here comes Kent, sir

Alb. O! it is he.

The time will not allow the compliment,
Which very manners urges.

Kent. I am come

To bid my king and master aye good night;
Is he not here?

Alb. Great thing of us forgot!—

Speak, Edmund, where's the king? and where's Cordelia?—

Seest thou this object, Kent?

[The Bodies of GONERIL and REGAN are brought in.]

Kent. Alack, why thus?

⁴⁵ The words "Speak, man," are only in the folio, which has the following variation:—

"Gent. 'Tis hot, it smokes;

It came from the heart of—O! she's dead.

Alb. Who dead? speak, man."

⁴⁶ Thus the quarto. The folio reads, "she confesses it." In the arrangement of the speeches here, the quarto is followed.

⁴⁷ "If Shakespeare had studied Aristotle all his life, he would not, perhaps, have been able to mark with more precision the distinct operations of terror and pity."—Tyrwhitt.

Edm. Yet Edmund was belov'd :
The one the other poison'd for my sake,
And after slew herself.

Alb. Even so.—Cover their faces.

Edm. I pant for life :— Some good I mean to do,
Despite of mine own nature. Quickly send,—
Be brief in it,—to the castle, for my writ
Is on the life of Lear, and on Cordelia :—
Nay, send in time.

Alb. Run, run, O run—

Edg. To who, my lord ? Who has the office ? send Thy token of reprieve.

Edm. Well thought on ; take my sword,
Give it the captain.

Alb. Haste thee, for thy life^a. [Exit EDGAR.]

Edm. He hath commission from thy wife and me
To hang Cordelia in the prison, and
To lay the blame upon her own despair,
That she fordid⁴⁸ herself.

Alb. The gods defend her ! Bear him hence awhile.
[EDMUND is borne off.]

Enter LEAR, with CORDELIA dead in his Arms⁴⁹ ; EDGAR, Officer, and Others.

Lear. Howl, howl, howl, howl !— O, you are men of stones ;
Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd use them so

^a The folio erroneously assigns this speech to Edgar.

⁴⁸ To fordo signifies to destroy. It is used again in Hamlet, Act v.—

“ Did, with desperate hand,
Fordo its own life.”

⁴⁹ The old historians say that Cordelia retired with victory from the battle, which she conducted in her father's cause, and thereby replaced him on the throne : but in a subsequent one fought against her (after the death of the old king) by the sons of Regan and Goneril, she was taken, and died miserably in prison (Geoffrey of Monmouth, the original relater of the story,

That heaven's vault should crack :—She's gone for ever !—

I know when one is dead, and when one lives ;
She's dead as earth :—Lend me a looking-glass ;
If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why, then she lives.

Kent. Is this the promis'd end ⁵⁰ ?

Edg. Or image of that horror ?

Alb. Fall, and cease ⁵¹ !

Lear. This feather stirs ; she lives ! if it be so,
It is a chance that does redeem all sorrows
That ever I have felt.

Kent. O my good master ! [Kneeling.

Lear. 'Pr'ythee, away.

Edg. 'Tis noble Kent, your friend.

Lear. A plague upon you, murderers, traitors all !

says that she killed herself). The dramatic writers of Shakespeare's age suffered as small a number of their heroes and heroines to escape as possible ; nor could the filial piety of this lady any more than the innocence of Ophelia, prevail on the poet to extend her life beyond her misfortunes.—Steevens.

⁵⁰ Kent, in contemplating the unexampled scene of exquisite affection which was then before him, and the unnatural attempt of Goneril and Regan against their father's life, recollects those passages of St. Mark's Gospel in which Christ foretells to his disciples the end of the world, and hence his question, "Is this the promised end of all things, which has been foretold to us?" To which Edgar adds, or only a representation or resemblance of that horror? So Macbeth, when he calls upon Banquo, Malcolm, &c. to view Duncan murdered, says :—

"Up, up, and see

The great doom's image! Malcolm! Banquo!

As from your graves rise up, and walk like sprites,

To countenance this horror."

There is an allusion to the same passage of Scripture in a speech of Gloucester's, in the second scene of the first act.—Mason.

⁵¹ To cease is to die. Albany is looking with attention on the pains employed by Lear to recover his child, and knows to what miseries he must survive, when he finds them to be ineffectual. Having these images present to his eyes and imagination, he cries out, "Rather fall, and cease to be at once, than continue in existence only to be wretched."

I might have sav'd her ; now she's gone for ever !—
Cordelia, Cordelia, stay a little. Ha !

What is't thou say'st ?—Her voice was ever soft,
Gentle, and low ; an excellent thing in woman :—
I kill'd the slave that was a hanging thee.

Off. 'Tis true, my lords, he did.

Lear. Did I not, fellow ?

I have seen the day, with my good biting falchion
I would have made them skip⁵² : I am old now,
And these same crosses spoil me.—Who are you ?
Mine eyes are none o' the best :—I'll tell you straight.

Kent. If fortune brag of two she lov'd and hated,
One of them we behold⁵³.

Lear. This is a dull sight⁵⁴ : Are you not Kent ?

Kent. The same ;

Your servant Kent : Where is your servant Caius ?

Lear. He's a good fellow, I can tell you that ;
He'll strike, and quickly too :—He's dead and rotten.

Kent. No, my good lord, I am the very man—

Lear. I'll see that straight.

Kent. That from your first of difference and decay,
Have follow'd your sad steps.

⁵² What Lear has just said has been anticipated by Justice Shallow, in The Merry Wives of Windsor :—“ I have seen the time with my long sword I would have made you four tall fellows skip like rats.” It is again repeated in Othello :—

“ I have seen the day

That with this little arm and this good sword

I have made my way,” &c.

⁵³ “ If Fortune, to display the plenitude of her power, should brag of two persons, one of whom she had highly elevated, and the other she had wofully depressed, we now behold the latter.” The quarto reads, “ She lov'd or hated,” which confirms this sense.

⁵⁴ I think, with Mr. Blakeway, that Lear means his eyesight was bedimmed either by excess of grief, or, as is usual, by the approach of death. So in Baret, “ Dull eyes, inertes oculi :” — “ To dull the eyesight, hebetare oculos.” Albany says of Lear below, “ He knows not what he sees,” where the folio erroneously reads “ he says.”

Lear. You are welcome hither.

Kent. Nor no man else ; all's cheerless, dark, and deadly.

Your eldest daughters have fore-doom'd⁵⁵ themselves,
And desperately are dead.

Lear. Ay, so I think.

Alb. He knows not what he sees ; and vain it is That we present us to him.

Edg. Very bootless.

Enter an Officer.

Off. Edmund is dead, my lord.

Alb. That's but a trifle here.—

You lords, and noble friends, know our intent.

What comfort to this great decay⁵⁶ may come,

Shall be applied : for us, we will resign,

During the life of this old majesty,

To him our absolute power :—You, to your rights ;

[To EDGAR and KENT.

With boot, and such addition as your honours

Have more than merited⁵⁷ :—All friends shall taste

The wages of their virtue, and all foes

The cup of their deservings.—O, see, see !

Lear. And my poor fool is hang'd⁵⁸ ! No, no, no life :

⁵⁵ Thus one of the quartos : the folio reads foredone, which is probably wrong, as the next words would then be mere tautology. See note 48, p. 482, ante.

⁵⁶ This great decay is Lear, whom Shakespeare poetically calls so ; and means the same as if he had said, " this piece of decayed royalty," " this ruined majesty." Gloucester calls him in a preceding scene, " ruin'd piece of nature."

⁵⁷ These lines are addressed to Kent as well as to Edgar, else the word honours would not have been in the plural number. Boot is advantage, increase. By honours is meant, honourable conduct.

⁵⁸ " This," says Steevens, " is an expression of tenderness for his dead Cordelia (not his fool, as some have thought), on whose

Why should a dog, a horse, a rat, have life,
 And thou no breath at all? Thou'lt come no more,
 Never, never, never, never, never!—

'Pray you, undo this button: Thank you, sir.—

Do you see this?—Look on her,—look,—her lips,—
 Look there, look there!—

[He dies

Edg. He faints!—My lord, my lord,—

Kent. Break, heart; I pry'thee, break!

Edg. Look up, my lord.

Kent. Vex not his ghost: O, let him pass! he hates him,

That would upon the rack of this tough world
 Stretch him out longer.

Edg. O, he is gone indeed.

Kent. The wonder is, he hath endur'd so long:
 He but usurp'd his life.

Alb. Bear them from hence. — Our present business

lips he is still intent, and dies while he is searching there for indications of life. 'Poor fool,' in the age of Shakespeare, was often an expression of endearment. The fool of Lear was long ago forgotten; having filled the space allotted to him in the arrangement of the play, he appears to have been silently withdrawn in the sixth scene of the third act. Besides this, Cordelia was recently hanged; but we know not that the Fool had suffered in the same manner, nor can imagine why he should. That the thoughts of a father, in the bitterest of all moments, when his favourite child lay dead in his arms, should recur to the antic, who had formerly diverted him, has somewhat in it that cannot be reconciled to the idea of genuine despair and sorrow.

There is an ingenious note by Sir Joshua Reynolds in the Variorum Shakespeare, sustaining a contrary opinion; and the state of Lear's mind must be remembered; yet Malone observes, "Lear, from the time of his entrance in this scene to his uttering these words, and from thence to his death, is wholly occupied by the loss of his daughter. — He is now in the agony of death, and surely at such a time, when his heart was just breaking, it would be highly unnatural that he should think of his fool. He had just seen his daughter hanged, having unfortunately been admitted too late to preserve her life, though time enough to punish the perpetrator of the act."

Is general woe. Friends of my soul, you twain
 [To KENT and EDGAR
 Rule in this realm, and the gor'd state sustain.

Kent. I have a journey, sir, shortly to go ;
 My master calls, and I must not say, no.

⁵⁹*Alb.* The weight of this sad time we must obey ;
 Speak what we feel, not what we ought to say.
 The oldest hath borne most : we, that are young,
 Shall never see so much, nor live so long.

[Exeunt, with a dead March.

⁵⁹ In the folio, this speech is given to Edgar.
